

Joseph ✦ AND ✦ ASENATH

Translations of Early Documents

BS 1830 .J6 A3 1918
Bible.
Joseph and Asenath

✓
JOSEPH AND ASENATH

THE CONFESSION AND PRAYER OF ASENATH
DAUGHTER OF PENTEPHRES THE PRIEST

BY
E. W. BROOKS

LONDON
SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING
CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE
NEW YORK: THE MACMILLAN CO.

1918

CONTENTS

	PAGE
INTRODUCTION	vii
I. ASENATH IS SOUGHT IN MARRIAGE BY THE KING'S SON AND MANY OTHERS	21
II. THE TOWER IN WHICH ASENATH LIVES IS DESCRIBED	22
III. JOSEPH ANNOUNCES HIS COMING TO PENTE- PHRES	24
IV. PENTEPHRES PROPOSES TO GIVE ASENATH TO JOSEPH IN MARRIAGE	26
V. JOSEPH ARRIVES AT PENTEPHRES' HOUSE	28
VI. ASENATH SEES JOSEPH FROM THE WINDOW	29
VII. JOSEPH SEES ASENATH AT THE WINDOW	30
VIII. JOSEPH BLESSES ASENATH	32
IX. ASENATH RETIRES AND JOSEPH PREPARES TO DEPART	33
X. ASENATH REJECTS THE EGYPTIAN GODS AND ABASES HERSELF	34
XI. ASENATH RESOLVES TO PRAY TO THE GOD OF THE HEBREWS	37
XII. ASENATH'S PRAYER	40
XIII. ASENATH'S PRAYER (continued)	42
XIV. THE ARCHANGEL MICHAEL VISITS ASENATH	44
XV. MICHAEL TELLS ASENATH THAT SHE SHALL BE JOSEPH'S WIFE	47
XVI. ASENATH FINDS A HONEYCOMB IN HER STOREHOUSE	50
XVII. MICHAEL DEPARTS	53

	PAGE
XVIII. ASENATH'S FACE IS TRANSFORMED . . .	55
XIX. JOSEPH RETURNS AND IS RECEIVED BY ASENATH	57
XX. PENTEPHRES RETURNS AND WISHES TO BETROTH ASENATH TO JOSEPH, BUT JOSEPH RESOLVES TO ASK HER HAND FROM PHARAOH	59
XXI. THE MARRIAGE OF JOSEPH AND ASENATH	61
XXII. ASENATH IS INTRODUCED TO JACOB .	62
XXIII. PHARAOH'S SON TRIES TO INDUCE SIMEON AND LEVI TO KILL JOSEPH	64
XXIV. PHARAOH'S SON CONSPIRES WITH DAN AND GAD TO KILL JOSEPH AND SEIZE ASENATH	67
XXV. PHARAOH'S SON GOES TO KILL HIS FATHER, BUT IS NOT ADMITTED. NEPHTHALIM AND ASHER PROTEST TO DAN AND GAD AGAINST THE CONSPIRACY .	71
XXVI. THE CONSPIRATORS KILL ASENATH'S GUARDS AND SHE FLEES	72
XXVII. THE MEN WITH PHARAOH'S SON AND THOSE WITH DAN AND GAD ARE KILLED; AND THE FOUR BROTHERS FLEE TO THE RAVINE AND THEIR SWORDS ARE STRICKEN FROM THEIR HANDS . . .	73
XXVIII. DAN AND GAD ARE SPARED AT ASENATH'S ENTREATY	75
XXIX. PHARAOH'S SON DIES. PHARAOH ALSO DIES AND JOSEPH SUCCEEDS HIM .	77
APPENDIX OF PASSAGES NOT CONTAINED IN THE GREEK TEXT	79

INTRODUCTION

BIBLIOGRAPHY

THE "Book of Joseph and Asenath," or, as it is otherwise called, the "Confession and Prayer of Asenath," was made known to the medieval world in the Speculum Historiale of Vincent of Beauvais (circ. 1260); and a French version of his text, made by John de Vigny in the fourteenth century, was printed in 1495, and a German version in 1539; an Icelandic version also exists in MS. in the British Museum.¹ Vincent's text was published by Fabricius in his Cod. Pseudepigr. V. T., and followed by a Greek fragment from the Oxford MS. Barocc. 148 (1713-23). About thirty years ago the present Provost of Eton (Dr. M. R. James) found in two MSS. in the library of Corpus College, Cambridge (288 and 424) the Latin text (obviously translated from Greek) of which Vincent's is an epitome; in 1889-90 M. Batiffol published the complete Greek text from three Vatican and two Oxford MSS.,² together with the Latin text, supplied by Dr. James, with a learned and illuminating introduction (Studia Patristica, fasc. i., ii.); and in 1898 a new edition of the Greek (inaccessible to me) was published by V. M. Istrin in the Antiquarian Publications of the Slav Commission of the Moscow Archæological Society. A Syriac version is incorporated in the compilation known under the name of Zacharias Rhetor, published in Land's Anecdota Syriaca, Vol. III. (1870),¹ where it is preceded by what purports to be a letter addressed to Moses of Ingila (known as having translated the Glaphyra of Cyril of Alexandria into Syriac after 550),² in which the writer states that he has found the work in a very old Greek book, apparently at Rhesaina, at any rate in Mesopotamia, and asks for a translation and an explanation of the allegory (θεωρία), and the answer of Moses.³ From this we know that the Syriac version was made not later than 569 (the date of "Zacharias"), and that it was translated from the Greek, which must therefore be presumed to be the original, and, as it was found in a very old book, must have been composed considerably earlier. A Latin translation of the Syriac by G. Oppenheim was published at Berlin in 1886. An Armenian version of the work appeared in the Mekhitarist Journal Bazmazep, Nos. xliiii., xliv. (Venice, 1885-6), and the latter part of the same text was published by A. Carrière, with a French translation, in the Nouveaux Mélanges

¹ Add. 11068 (dated 1745).

² Vat. Gr. 803 (A), Palat. Gr. 17 (B), id. 364, Bodl. Barocc. 148 (C), id. 147 (D). Another MS. exists at Mt. Athos, and there is a modern Greek epitome in the seventeenth-century Bodl. MS. Roe 5. I take the references from Batiffol.

¹ The published translations of "Zacharias" omit the book of Asenath. A complete text of the whole compilation, with Latin translation, by myself for the Corpus Scr. Or. Chr. is now in the press.

² Wright, Syriac Literature, p. 112.

³ Zach. Rh. i. 4-6.

Orientalux (Paris, 1886). The Armenian was republished by Basile in the Apocr. Arm. V. T. (Venice, 1896),¹ and an old Slavonic version, edited by S. Novakovič, appeared in Starine, the journal of the Agram Academy of Sciences, No. ix., in 1877. Besides these, Ethiopic and Arabic versions are known to have existed, and a Latin translation of the Arabic (dated 1460) is preserved at Vienna.²

CONTENTS

In the Book of Genesis Asenath is mentioned three times only; once it is stated that Pharaoh gave Joseph Asenath daughter of Potipherah, priest of On, to wife, and in the other two places she is said to have borne Manasseh and Ephraim to Joseph;³ but out of these dry bones the elaborate romance contained in our Book of Asenath has been constructed. Here Asenath is represented as a maiden of surpassing beauty whose hand is sought by the young men of highest position in the land, among them the eldest son of the king, but she lives in seclusion in a tower and regards all men with contempt. One day Joseph, while going round the land to collect corn, announces his intention of paying Potipherah a visit, and ¹ Inaccessible to me; perhaps only a reprint. The Armenian version is mentioned by John the Deacon, who reformed the calendar in 1085 (Batiffol). An English translation of the Armenian exists in The Uncanonical Writings of the O.T. found in the Armenian MSS. of the Library of St. Lazarus, translated into English by Rev. Dr. Jacques Issaverdens (Venice, 1901), pp. 92 ff.

² Vind. 4739.

³ Gen. xli. 45, 50; xlvi. 20.

Potipherah suggests to Asenath a project of marrying her to Joseph. This she rejects with an outburst of scornful anger and returns to the tower, but on seeing Joseph enter the court she declares him to be a son of God and is struck with remorse. Joseph having seen her at the window, she is called down to greet him, and, when he is told that she is his host's virgin daughter, he accepts her as his sister; but, when she is ordered to kiss him, refuses to allow her to approach as being an idolater, but prays for the blessing of God upon her. He then departs, promising to return a week later, and Asenath spends the intervening time in fasting and humiliation and finally in prayer. The archangel Michael then visits her and announces that she shall be Joseph's wife, after which he produces a miraculous honeycomb from which he gives her to eat, and then says that she has now eaten the bread of life and drunk the cup of immortality and been anointed with the chrism of incorruption. After Michael's departure Joseph is announced, and Asenath goes out to meet him, and, Joseph having also had a visit from the archangel, they meet as affianced bride and bridegroom. Potipherah then returns from his country house, where he has been spending the interval, and states that he will summon the guests to the marriage-feast immediately, but Joseph says that he must return to Pharaoh and obtain Asenath's hand from him.¹ The marriage is then celebrated at the king's court, Jacob and his family come to Egypt and Asenath is presented to them, and the book ends with a story of the frustration of a plot by Pharaoh's son, with the assistance of Dan and Gad, to kill Joseph and get possession of Asenath.

¹ Necessitated by Gen. xli. 45.

COMPOSITION AND OBJECT

That the book in its present shape is the work of a Christian writer will be at once recognised by any reader, the references to the sacred bread and cup and chrism,¹ by which the ceremonies of the Eucharist and Confirmation are clearly meant, being sufficient to place the fact beyond doubt; but to this may be added the exaltation of virginity which we find throughout the book, and the prominence of the doctrine of forgiveness,² which, though not unknown to the Jews, would hardly be made so conspicuous in a Jewish work.³ At the same time, however, there are passages which betray the hand of a Jewish writer. Thus, in the description of Asenath at the beginning it is said that she bore no resemblance to the Egyptian women but was in every respect like the Hebrew women, "tall as Sarah, and comely as Rebecca, and beautiful as Rachel," and in the account of Michael's visit there is a strange passage in which the angel says: "Take now the mantle from thine head, for that thou art to-day a pure virgin, and thine head is as of a young man;"⁴ though the Christian practice

¹ Chs. viii., xv., xvi., xix.

² Chs. xxiii., xxviii., xxix.

³ Again in the addition to Ch. xvi. given by BD and the versions (see Section "THE TEXT") the sign of the Cross is indicated.

⁴ Ch. xv.

was the opposite of this, that virgins should be veiled. Tertullian, however, in his treatise, De Velandis Virginibus, argues against men who contended that virgins should not be veiled,¹ and on the strength of this M. Batiffol infers that it was the custom among the Montanists or some similar sect not to veil virgins, and that our book was written in circles in which this custom prevailed. There is, however, no evidence for the existence of the practice among Christians outside Africa, while, on the other hand, it seems to have been a regular custom among Jews and other Semitic peoples to leave their women's faces exposed while they were unmarried, and to put on the veil when they married as a sign that they were the exclusive property of their husbands;² and we may, therefore, fairly assign a Jewish origin to the passage in question. Another similar trace occurs in an earlier part of the book, where Potipherah says to Joseph: "Our daughter is as thy sister," to which Joseph answers: "If she is your daughter, and is a virgin, let her come, for that she is my sister, and I love her from to-day as my sister."³ Here, again, I am informed that it is common among Semitic peoples to introduce the daughter of the house to a guest as "your sister,"⁴ perhaps on the ground that the head of the household is in the position of a father to all

¹ Cf. also De Orat., xxi., xxii.

² I owe this information to Dr. H. M. Léon, who besides being a good Hebrew scholar lived many years in the Turkish empire, and states that the practice still exists there.

³ Ch. vii.

⁴ This also I owe to Dr. Léon.

who are in it, and we may therefore ascribe this passage, with the exception of the words "and is a virgin" (a Christian attempt to convert the relationship into a spiritual one), to a Jewish author. To the same hand we should naturally attribute the long-winded descriptions of the splendour of Asenath's apartments and attire, of Joseph's chariot and apparel, and of Asenath's beauty after her transformation,¹ which have a truly Oriental ring about them, reminding us of the Apocalypse; while the last, with its exaggerated Eastern imagery, naturally recalls the Song of Songs. We are, therefore, justified in assuming that our book is a Christian revision of a Jewish production, and, though the Jewish text is completely lost, we are able from various sources to discover approximately what it contained. The statement of the book of Genesis that Joseph married the daughter of an Egyptian priest, when compared with Abraham's care to find a wife for Isaac among his own kindred, and the grief of Isaac and Rebecca at Esau's marriage to a Hittite and their fear lest Jacob should take a wife from the daughters of the land, naturally caused considerable difficulty to the rabbinic commentators, and an ingenious story was invented to account for it. The Targum of Jonathan, in its commentary on Gen. xli. 45, has the following: "Pharaoh . . . gave him to wife Asenath whom Dinah had had by Shechem, whom the wife of Putifar prince of Tanis had brought up," while according to Rabbi Eliezer (eighth century),

¹ Chs. iii., iv., v., xviii.

Jacob had a plate tied round the child's neck, with the name of God on it, and turned her out, and the archangel Michael carried her to the house of Potipharah.¹ The difficulty was therefore removed by making Asenath of Hebrew birth on her mother's side, and new light is thrown on the passage already cited which represents her as resembling the Hebrews rather than the Egyptians, and compares her to Sarah, Rebecca, and Rachel, and we see the reason for the close connexion in which Asenath is brought to Simeon and Levi, the two who had avenged Dinah upon the men of Shechem, of whom in the story of Joseph as given in Genesis Simeon plays only a passive part and Levi no part at all.² M. Batiffol thinks that the passage found in the Syriac and Armenian in which Asenath is made to kiss Jacob "as one who returneth from war to his house after a long time,"³ refers to the recognition of the relationship, and that some Greek scribe omitted it because in the Christian revision no meaning could be attached to it ; but it would be unsafe to depend upon this. On the other hand, I cannot with M. Batiffol regard the visit of Michael as a Christian addition. I have already shown that the passage in which Asenath is told to remove her veil is probably Jewish, and as, according to the story told by Eliezer, Michael brought her to Egypt,

¹ Pirkê de Rabbi Eliezer, Eng. trans. by G. Friedlander, ch. xxxviii.

² It is worth noting that the prohibition against marrying a strange woman is in the Book of Jubilees (ch. xii.) connected with the story of Simeon and Levi, we may infer that in the Jewish work the object was to reveal the secret of her birth and so remove the impediment to her marriage to Joseph ; but, as in the Christian revision the impediment of alien birth was transformed into an impediment of alien religion, the same purpose is there effected by converting her to Judaism, or rather to Christianity, for the language of the angel has a Christian cast, and, as stated above, the mystic honeycomb manifestly represents the Eucharist. To the Christian reviser the point on which the original story turns, the marriage of Joseph to his niece, was horrifying, and the story of Asenath's birth was therefore altogether suppressed, and a spiritual relationship on the basis of a common virginity substituted, and the praises of virginity and of penitence, which in the monastic ideal was closely connected with it, occupy a large portion of the book, though the very fact that the heroine is married and bears children is evidence that the author is adapting an older document in which virginity was held in less estimation.

³ Ch. xxii.

[Kohler in *The Jewish Encyclopædia*¹ regards our book as essentially Jewish in character, but subjected to slight Christian revision. "It contains a Midrashic story of the conversion of Asenath, the wife of Joseph, and of her magnanimity toward her enemies"—a story typical of the conversion of a heathen to Judaism. This seems to us to be the correct view. The Jewish features are pronounced. Thus the transformation of the name Asenath into "City of Refuge" is suggested in a characteristically Midrashic way by the inversion of the Hebrew name אסנת which, by transposition of the letters, was made to read נסנת = "she has taken refuge," and would naturally suggest מקום = "place of refuge." Asenath becomes the "City of Refuge" because through her many Gentiles should take refuge under the wings of the divine Shekinah, and "under her walls those that turn to God, the Most High, should find protection in repentance." The idea that the proselyte who has left country, friends and relations "for the sake of virtue and holiness" finds a city of refuge in Israel's religion has a close parallel in Philo, who says (De Monarchia, i. § 7) that such proselytes "ought not to be left destitute of some other cities, and homes and friends, but there ought to be places of refuge always ready for those who come over to religion." Another indication of the fundamentally Jewish character of our book is the fact that throughout no other Saviour or Forgiver of Sin is mentioned than the God of Israel.

¹ ii. 172-176.

Kohler holds that the Rabbinic view according to which Asenath was represented to be a daughter of Dinah (and therefore a true Israelite) is later, and superseded the earlier view (represented in our book) that Asenath was a proselyte from heathenism. It was an attempt to obviate the objectionable fact that Joseph should have married a heathen wife.

"The book as a whole," Kohler concludes, "belongs to the Hellenistic propaganda literature by which Jewish writers endeavoured to win the non-Jewish world for the Jewish faith, while at the same time eagerly representing their Hebrew ancestors as physical as well as moral heroes." In its original Jewish (Greek) form it probably belongs to a much earlier date than the fifth century; perhaps, at the latest, to the early years of the second century A.D.—Edd.]

DATE AND PLACE OF ORIGIN

As to the date and place of writing, we have seen that the book was in existence some time before 569; and the terms in which the Syriac writer relates the discovery are interesting, but unfortunately obscure. The supposed author of the letter to Moses of Ingila is represented as saying that he found it "in the library of the memorable bishops who were called the family of Beth Beruya (?), from the city of Rhesaina, in the possession of a boy of their kin," where we should probably not press "from" to its strict meaning, but suppose that the book was found at Rhesaina, and Beruya (B r w 'a) probably stands for Berrhœa (Aleppo).¹ Hence we may perhaps conjecture that on the expulsion of the Monophysites in 519 the bishop of Berrhœa (Antoninus) took his books or those of his see with him, and that in the writer's time they were in the possession of a young kinsman of his at Rhesaina.²

¹ Syr. Halab. Greek names are sometimes used in Syriac instead of the native forms, and in viii. 4 "Zacharias" himself uses "Emes" for Emesa in place of "Hems."

² So Mara of Amida took his books to Alexandria, whence after his death they were carried back to Amida (Zach. Rh. viii. 5).

On account of the prominence given to St. Michael, M. Batiffol supposes the work to have been written in Central Asia Minor, where St. Michael was specially honoured; but I have shown that Michael's visit was probably in the Jewish original, and the Eastern character of the work makes it more natural to refer it to those Eastern countries in which it is first found, while the fact that it was written in Greek is strong evidence for a Syrian rather than a Mesopotamian origin, and this theory gains further support if I am right in inferring that the book found by the Syrian writer came from Berrhœa. M. Batiffol thinks it was probably written in the fifth century, but there is no positive evidence for the date.¹

CHARACTER OF THE WORK

The Syriac writer regards the work as an allegory; but, as the end of Moses' answer is lost, we do not know the details of his explanation, though from what remains it would seem that he supposed it to represent the union of the Logos with a human soul. From this point of view Joseph may be considered as standing for Christ, and M. Batiffol suggests three possible interpretations of the figure of Asenath—(1) the Church, (2) the converted soul, and (3) virginity—and decides in favour of the last, but it would be outside the scope of this introduction to discuss the matter here. In spite of the turgid style and the wearisome repetitions, the book reaches a literary standard much above that of other similar works, and the simile of the little boy in Ch. xii. is worthy of Homer; but the story of the plot in Chs. xxiii.—xxix. falls much below the earlier portion. It is interesting to note that many incidents from our book have been incorporated in the lives of St. Barbara and St. Irene. The seclusion in a tower, however, which both these lives have in common with our book, is a common myth, which is found in the Greek legend of Danae and in the Indian story of Buddha.¹ For the character of the Jewish work see pp. xiii ff.

¹ As the Syriac writer calls the book found at Rhesaina 'very old,' it can hardly be later. M. Batiffol would place the Jewish work in the fourth century.

THE TEXT

Though Greek was the original language of the book, the versions contain many passages, absent from the existing Greek text, which have every appearance of genuineness, and we must therefore infer that our MSS. are derived from an abridged edition, and the value of M. Batiffol's careful and scholarly work is impaired by the facts that at the time of editing the Greek he seems to have been unacquainted with the Latin;² that, though he mentions both the Mekhitarist text and Carrière's edition, he makes no use of the Armenian in his critical notes; and that he used the Syriac only in Oppenheim's translation, and was apparently unaware of the existence of the Slavonic. Of the ¹ See A. Wirth, Danae in Christlichen Legenden (Prague, Vienna, Leipzig, 1892). This contains the text of both lives, but that of Barbara has been edited from more MSS. by J. Viteau (Paris, 1897).

² The notes contain no references to it.

four versions the Latin in the earlier part closely follows the Greek, but becomes shorter as it proceeds, until at the end it is a mere epitome ; and the Slavonic is also much shortened. Of the other two the Armenian is the longer¹ and the nearer to the Greek, though it contains many passages found in other versions, but absent in our Greek text. Of the Greek MSS. B D contain a shorter text than the others, and often agree with the versions in their omissions, but in Ch. xvi. they have a long insertion which is found in different forms in the versions and is almost certainly original.²

THE PRESENT TRANSLATION

I have translated from Batiffol's text except in a few places where it is obviously wrong. To give all the variants would occupy much too much space and make the notes almost unintelligible (perhaps at some future time we may be given a complete critical edition of the book in which all the versions will be included in full), and for the purpose of this series I have thought it enough to record the variants in passages in which the Greek text is unsupported and a few others which there is special reason for recording, and the passages covered by the variants are marked in the text by a half-bracket at the beginning and the reference-number at the end. Longer insertions contained in the versions are given in an Appendix.

¹ Chs. xxv.-xxviii. are, however, almost wholly omitted ; see note to Ch. xxv.

² See p. 81, n. 4.

JOSEPH AND ASENATH

THE CONFESSION AND PRAYER OF ASENATH,
DAUGHTER OF PENTEPHRES THE PRIEST¹

Asenath is sought in Marriage by the King's Son and many others.

I. IN the first year of plenty, in the second month, on the fifth of the month, Pharaoh sent Joseph to go round all the land of Egypt ; and in the fourth month of the first year, on the eighteenth of the month, Joseph came to the borders of Heliopolis, and he was gathering the corn of that country as the sand of the sea. And there was a certain man in that city by name Pentephres, who was a priest of Heliopolis and a satrap of Pharaoh, and chief of all Pharaoh's satraps and princes ; and this man was exceeding rich and very sage and gentle, and he was also a counsellor of Pharaoh, because he was prudent beyond all Pharaoh's princes. And he had a virgin daughter, by name Asenath, of eighteen years, tall and comely, and beautiful to behold exceedingly beyond every virgin upon the earth. Now Asenath herself bare no likeness to ¹the virgins ²the daughters of the

¹ The title varies in the MSS. "The Prayer of Asenath, given by Batiffol, is in none of them. The text follows B.

² B D versions om.

Egyptians, but was in all things like the daughters of the Hebrews, being tall as Sarah and comely as Rebecca and beautiful as Rachel; and the fame of her beauty spread abroad into all that land and unto the ends of the world, so that by reason of this all the sons of the princes and the satraps desired to woo her, nay, and the sons of the kings also, all young men and mighty, and there was great strife among them because of her, and they essayed to fight against one another. And Pharaoh's firstborn son also heard about her, and he continued entreating his father to give her to him to wife and saying to him: "Give me, father, Asenath, the daughter of Pentephres, the ^rfirst man¹ of Heliopolis to wife." And his father Pharaoh said to him: "Wherefore dost thou on thy part seek a wife lower than thyself when thou art king of all this land? Nay, but lo! the daughter of Joacim the King of Moab is betrothed to thee, and she herself is a queen and beautiful to behold exceedingly. Take then this one to thyself to wife."

The Tower in which Asenath lives is described.

II. But Asenath set at naught and scorned every man, being boastful and haughty, and never had a man seen her, inasmuch as Pentephres had in his house a tower adjoining, great and high exceedingly, and above the tower was a loft containing ten chambers. And the first chamber was great and very lovely and paved with purple stones, and the walls thereof were faced with precious and many-coloured stones, and the roof also of that chamber was of gold. And within that chamber gods of the Egyptians, whereof was no number, gold and silver, were fixed, and all those Asenath worshipped, and she feared them, and she performed sacrifices to them every day. And the second chamber also contained all Asenath's adorning and chests, and there was gold in it, and much silver and gold-woven raiment unlimited, and stones choice and of great price, and fine garments of linen, and all the adornment of her virginity was there. And the third chamber was Asenath's storehouse, containing all the good things of the earth. And the remaining seven chambers the seven virgins who ministered to Asenath occupied, each one having one chamber, for that they were of the same age, born on the same night with Asenath, and she loved them much; and they were also beautiful exceedingly as the stars of heaven, and never did a man converse with them or a male child.

¹Lat. Syr. Slav. "priest"; in Arm. the sentence is shortened.

Now Asenath's great chamber where her virginity was fostered had three windows; and the first window was very large, looking over the court to the east; and the second looked toward the south, and the third looked over the street.¹ And a golden bedstead stood in the chamber looking toward the east; and the bed was laid with purple stuff interwoven with gold, the bed being woven of scarlet and crimson stuff and fine linen. On this bed Asenath alone slept, and never had man or other woman sat thereon. And there was also a great court adjoining the house all round, and an exceeding high wall round the court built of great rectangular stones; and there were also four gates in the court overlaid with iron, and these were kept each by eighteen strong young men armed; and there were also planted along the wall fair trees of all kinds and all bearing fruit, their fruit being ripe, for it was the season of harvest; and there was also a rich fount of¹ water springing from the right of the same court; and beneath the fount was a great cistern receiving the water of that fount, whence there went, as it were, a river through the midst of the court and it watered all the trees of that court.

2212 ¹Lat. Syr. Arm. ins. "to the north," Slav. to the south" (it has above in place of "south," "north").

Joseph announces his Coming to Pentephres.

III. And it came to pass in the first year of the seven years of plenty, in the fourth month, on the twenty-eighth² of the month, that Joseph came to the borders of Heliopolis collecting the corn of that district. And, when Joseph drew near to that city, he sent twelve men before him to Pentephres, the priest of Heliopolis, saying: "I will come in to thee to-day, because it is the time of noon and of the midday meal, and there is great heat of the sun, and that I may cool myself under the roof of thine house." And Pentephres, when he heard these things, rejoiced with exceeding great joy, and said: "Blessed be the Lord God of Joseph, because my lord Joseph hath thought me worthy." And Pentephres called the overseer of his house and said to him: "Haste and make mine house ready, and prepare a great dinner, because Joseph the mighty one of God cometh to us to-day." And, when Asenath heard that her father and mother had come from the possession of their inheritance, she rejoiced greatly ¹ and said: "I will go and see my father and mother, because they have come from the possession of our inheritance" (for that it was the harvest-season). And Asenath hasted ² into her chamber where her robes lay ³ and put on a fine linen robe made of crimson stuff and interwoven with gold, and girded herself with a golden girdle, and bracelets round her hands; and about her feet she put golden buskins, and round her neck she cast an ornament of great price and precious stones, which were embellished on all sides, having also the names ³ of the gods of the Egyptians everywhere engraved on them, both on the bracelets and the stones; ⁴ and she put also a tiara on her head and bound a diadem round her temples and covered her head with a mantle.

2213 ① Lat. Syr. insert "living," Slav. "abundant"; Arm. om. "of water."

2214 ② Versions "eighteenth."

2216
Covered

2218

2215

2217

2219

2220

① Versions om.
 ② Versions om. between "hasted ... and"
 ③ Syr. ins. "and images."
 ④ Something seems to be wrong here, but Lat. Arm. Slav. agree; Lat. ins. "and the images of all the idols were formed upon them"; similarly Arm. Slav.

Pentephres proposes to give Asenath to Joseph in Marriage.

IV. And thereupon¹ she hasted and went down the stairs from her loft and came to her father and mother and kissed them. And Pentephres and his wife rejoiced over their daughter Asenath² with exceeding great joy, for that they beheld her adorned and embellished as the bride of God; and they brought forth all the good things which they had brought from the possession of their inheritance and gave them to their daughter; and Asenath rejoiced over all the good things, over the late summer fruit and the grapes and the dates and over the doves, and over the mulberries and the figs, because they were all fair and pleasant to taste.³ And Pentephres said to his daughter Asenath: "Child." And she said: "Here am I, my lord." And he said to her: "Sit down between us, and I will speak to thee my words." And she sat down between her father and her mother, and Pentephres her father took hold of her right hand with his right hand and kissed it tenderly and said: "Dearest child." And she said to him: "Here am I, my lord father." And Pentephres said to her: "Lo! Joseph, the mighty one of God, cometh to us to-day, and this man is ruler of all 2221 ① Gr. εἶθ' οὕτω; BD versions om.; so always except p. 35, l. 10, where B has it.

2222 ② B versions om.

2223 ③ Syr. om.; in Lat. Arm. the fruits are different. "Doves" can hardly be right, but Lat. agrees. Slav. om. "doves . . . and the."

common phrase will not. The
 vb. in phrase "hasted."

the land of Egypt ; and King Pharaoh appointed him ruler of all our land and king, and he himself giveth corn to all this country, and saveth it from the coming famine ; and this Joseph is a man that worshipping God, and discreet and a virgin as thou art to-day, and a man mighty in wisdom and knowledge, and the spirit of God is upon him and the grace of the Lord is in him. Come, dearest child, and I will give thee over to him to wife, and thou shalt be to him for a bride, and he himself shall be thy bridegroom for ever."

And, when Asenath heard these words from her father, a great sweat¹ was poured out upon her over her face, and she waxed wroth with great anger, and she looked askance with her eyes at her father and said : " Wherefore, my lord father, speakest thou these words ? Wishest thou to give me over as a captive to an alien and a fugitive and one that hath been sold ? Is not this the son of the shepherd from the land of Canaan ? and he himself hath been left behind by him.² Is not this he who lay with his mistress, and his lord cast him into the prison of darkness, and Pharaoh brought him out from the prison inasmuch as he interpreted his dream, as the older women of the Egyptians also interpret ? Nay, but I will be married to the king's firstborn son, because he himself is king of all the land." When he heard these

2224
① B D "red sweat"; Lat. "rubor"; similarly Syr. Arm. Slav.

2225
② Lat. Syr. Arm. om. ; Slav. "and thence hath been brought here."

things Pentephres was ashamed to speak further to his daughter Asenath about Joseph, for that she answered him with boastfulness and anger.

Joseph arrives at Pentephres' House.

V. And lo! a young man of Pentephres' servants sprang in, and he saith to him: "Lo! Joseph standeth before the doors of our court." And when Asenath heard these words she fled from the face of her father and mother and went up into the loft, and she came into her chamber and stood at the great window looking east to see Joseph coming into her father's house. And Pentephres came out and his wife and all their kindred and their servants to meet Joseph; and, when the gates of the court that looked east were opened, Joseph came in seated in the second chariot of Pharaoh; and there were yoked four horses white like snow with golden bits, and the chariot was fashioned all of pure gold. And Joseph was clad in a tunic white and rare, and the robe that was thrown round him was purple, made of fine linen interwoven with gold, and a golden wreath was upon his head, and round his wreath were twelve choice stones, and above the stones twelve golden rays, and in his right hand a royal staff, which had an olive branch outstretched, and there was abundance of fruit thereon. When, then, Joseph had come into the court and the doors thereof had been shut, and every strange man and woman remained outside the court, for that the guards of the gates drew to and closed the doors, Pentephres came and his wife and all their kindred except their daughter Asenath, and they made obeisance to Joseph upon their faces upon the earth; and Joseph descended from his chariot and greeted them with his hand.

Asenath sees Joseph from the Window.

VI. And when Asenath saw Joseph she was sore pricked in the soul and her heart was crushed, and her knees were loosed and her whole body trembled and she feared with great fear, and then she groaned and said in her heart: "Alas me miserable! where now shall I, the wretched one, go away? or where shall I be hidden from his face? or how shall Joseph the son of God see me, for that on my part I have spoken evil things about him? Alas me miserable! whither shall I go away and be hidden, because he himself seeth every hiding-place, and knoweth all things, and no hidden thing escapeth him by reason of the great light that is in him? And now may the God of Joseph be gracious to me because in ignorance I have spoken wicked words against him. What now shall I, the wretched one, follow?¹ 'Have I not² said: 'Joseph cometh, the son of the shepherd from the land of Canaan'? Now therefore ¹ This can hardly be correct. Lat. Slav. "How do I now appear, the most miserable?"; Arm. "What shall I do, the most miserable?"; similarly Syr.

² Syr. "Strange counsellors deceived me, who"; Arm. "My father and mother spake to me and."

he hath come to us in his chariot as the sun from heaven, and he entered our house to-day, and he shineth into it like light upon the earth. But I am foolish and bold, because I scorned him and spake evil words about him and did not know that Joseph is a son of God. For who among men will ever beget such beauty, or what womb of woman will give birth to such light? Wretched am I and foolish, because I have spoken evil words to my father. Now, therefore, let my father give me to Joseph for an handmaid and a bondwoman rather, and I will be in bondage to him for ever."

Joseph sees Asenath at the Window.

VII. And Joseph came into the house of Pentephres and sat upon a chair. And they washed his feet, and set a table before him separately, for that Joseph did not eat with the Egyptians, since this was an abomination to him. And Joseph looked up and saw Asenath peeping out,¹ and he saith to Pentephres: "Who is that woman who is standing in the loft by the window? Let her go away from this house." For Joseph feared, saying: "Lest she herself also annoy me." For all the wives and daughters of the princes and the satraps of all the land of Egypt used to annoy him in order that they might lie with him; but many wives and daughters of the Egyptians also, as many as beheld Joseph, were distressed on account of his beauty;² and the envoys whom the women sent to him with gold and silver and precious gifts Joseph sent back with threatening and insult, saying: "I will not sin in the sight of the Lord God and the face of my father Israel." For Joseph had God¹ always before his eyes and ever¹ remembered the injunctions of his father; for Jacob often spake and admonished his son Joseph and all his sons: "Keep yourselves, children, securely from a strange woman so as not to have fellowship with her, for fellowship with her is ruin and destruction." Therefore Joseph said: "Let that woman depart from this house." And Pentephres said to him: "My lord, that woman whom thou hast seen standing in the loft is not a stranger, but is our² daughter, one who hateth every man, and no other man hath ever seen her save thou only to-day; and, if thou wishest, lord,³ she shall come and speak to thee, for that our daughter is as thy sister." And Joseph rejoiced with exceeding great joy, for that Pentephres said: "She is a virgin hating every man."⁴ And Joseph said to Pentephres and his wife: "If she is your daughter, and is a virgin, let her come, for that she is my sister, and I love her from to-day as my sister."

¹ Versions om.

² Lat. Arm. ins. "but J. despised them."

223

230 ¹ B D Lat. Syr. Arm. om.; in Slav. the sentence is different.

232 ² B D Lat. Syr. Slav. ins. "virgin."

33 ³ B D versions om.

234 ⁴ Lat. ins. "and he said in his mind, 'If she is a virgin hating every man, she herself will never annoy me'"; similarly Syr. Arm.

Joseph blesses Asenath.

VIII. Then her mother went up into the loft and brought Asenath to Joseph, and Pentephres said to her: "Kiss thy brother, because he also is a virgin even as thou to-day, and hateth every strange woman even as thou hatest every strange man." And Asenath said to Joseph: "Hail, lord, blessed of God Most High." And Joseph said to her: "God who quickeneth all things shall bless thee, damsel."¹ Pentephres saith then to his daughter Asenath: "Come and kiss thy brother." When Asenath then came up² to kiss Joseph, Joseph stretched forth his right hand, and laid it on her breast between her two paps (for her paps were already standing forth ^{like lovely apples}³), and Joseph said: "It is not meet for a man that worshippeth God, who blesseth with his mouth the living God, and eateth the blessed bread of life, and drinketh the blessed cup of immortality, and is anointed with the blessed unction of incorruption, to kiss a strange woman, who blesseth with her mouth dead and deaf idols and eateth from their table the bread of strangling and drinketh from their libation the cup of deceit and is anointed with the unction of destruction; but the man that worshippeth God will kiss his mother and the sister who is born of his mother and the sister who is born of his tribe⁴ and the wife who shareth his couch, who bless

2235
2236
① BD versions om.

② προσῆλθεν (B D, so versions) is clearly correct, not ἀπῆλθεν.

③ Lat. Syr. Arm. om.; B C D Slav. om. "between . . . apples."

2237
④ D versions ins. "and his kin."

with their mouth the living God. Likewise also it is not meet for a woman that worshippeth God to kiss a strange man, for that this is an abomination in the sight of the Lord God." And, when Asenath heard these words from Joseph, she was sore distressed and groaned; and, as she was looking steadfastly at Joseph with her eyes open, they were filled with tears. And Joseph, when he saw her weeping,¹ pitied her exceedingly, for that he was mild and merciful and one who feared the Lord. Then he lifted up his right hand above her head and said: "Lord God of my father Israel, the Most High and the mighty God, who quickenedst all things and calledst from the darkness to the light and from error to truth and from death to life, bless thou this virgin also, and quicken her, and renew her with thy holy² spirit,³ and let her eat the bread of thy life and drink the cup of thy blessing, and number her with thy people whom thou cholest before all things were made, and let her enter into thy rest which thou preparedst for thine elect, and let her live in thine eternal life for ever."

Asenath retires and Joseph prepares to depart.

IX. And Asenath rejoiced over the blessing of Joseph with exceeding⁵ great joy. Then she

¹ B versions om.

² Lat. ins. "and refashion with thine hidden hand"; similarly Syr. Arm.

³ Lat. Syr. Arm. om; Slav. om. clause.

⁴ B D versions om.

hasted and came up into her loft by herself, and fell upon her bed in infirmity, for that there was in her joy and sorrow and great fear ; and a continuous sweat ¹ was poured over her ¹ when she heard these words from Joseph, and when he spake to her in the name of God Most High. Then she wept with great and bitter weeping, and she turned in penitence from her gods whom she was wont to worship, and the idols, which she spurned, and waited for evening to come. But Joseph ate and drank ; and he told his serving-men to yoke the horses to their chariots, and to ² go round all the land. And Pentephres said to Joseph : "Let my lord lodge here ³ to-day, and in the morning thou shalt go thy way." And Joseph said : "Nay, but I will go away to-day, for that this is the day on which God began to make all His created things, and on the eighth day I also return to you and will lodge here."

Asenath rejects the Egyptian Gods and abases herself.

X. And, when Joseph had left the house, Pentephres also and all his kindred departed to their inheritance, and Asenath was left alone with the seven virgins, listless and weeping till the sun set ; and she neither ate bread nor drank water,

2242
2243
2244
① A B C versions om.

② B D "the chariots, for he said, 'I will go away and'"; similarly versions.

③ ἐνταῦθα should mean "there." B D Lat. Arm. Slav. om. In Syr. the sentence is in oratio obliqua and the word is represented by "with them."

but¹ while all slept she herself alone was awake² and weeping and frequently beating her breast with her hand.³ And after these things Asenath rose from her bed, and went quietly down the stairs from the loft, and on coming to the gateway found the portress sleeping with her children ; and she hasted and took down from the door the leathern cover of the curtain and filled it with cinders and carried it up to the loft and laid it on the floor. And thereupon she shut the door securely and fastened it with the iron bolt from the side and groaned with great groaning together with [†] much and very great⁴ weeping. But the virgin whom Asenath loved above all the virgins having heard her groaning hasted and came to the door after awaking the other virgins also and found it shut. And, when she had listened to the groaning and the weeping of Asenath, she said to her, [†]standing without :⁵ “ What is it, my mistress, and wherefore art thou sad ? And what is it that troubleth thee ? Open to us and let us see thee.” And Asenath said to her, being shut inside : “ Great and grievous pain hath attacked mine head, and I am resting in my bed, and I am not able to rise and open to you, for that I am infirm over all my limbs. Go therefore each of you to her chamber and sleep, and let

45
96 ① Lat. ins. “when night had come” ; similarly Syr. Arm.

97 ② Lat. ins. “and was (wrapt) in desires” ; similarly Syr. Arm.

98 ③ Lat. ins. “and feared with great fear and trembled with grievous trembling” ; similarly Syr. Arm. Slav.

149 ④ B D Lat. Arm. Slav. om. ; Syr. “bitter.”

⑤ B D versions om.

me be still." And, when the virgins had departed, each to her own chamber, Asenath rose and opened the door of her bedroom quietly, and went away into her second chamber where the chests of her adornment were, and she opened her coffer and took a black and sombre tunic which she put on and mourned when her firstborn brother died. Having taken, then, this tunic, she carried it into her chamber, and again shut the door securely, and put the bolt to from the side. Then, therefore, Asenath put off her royal robe, and put on the mourning tunic, and loosed her golden girdle and girded herself with a rope,¹ and put off the tiara, that is the mitre, from her head, likewise also the diadem, and the chains from her hands and her feet were also all laid upon the floor. Then she taketh her choice robe and the golden girdle and the mitre and her diadem, and she cast them through the window that looked toward the north, to the poor. And thereupon she took all her gods that were in her chamber, the gods of gold and of silver whereof there was no number, and brake them up into fragments, and cast them through the window to poor men and beggars. And again Asenath took her royal dinner and the fatlings and the fish and heifer's flesh, and all the sacrifices of her gods, and the vessels of the wine of libation, and cast them all through the window that looked north as food for the dogs.² And after these things she took

7250
2251
① Versions om.

② Lat. ins. "of strangers; for she said: 'How shall my dogs eat of the supper of the sacrifice of idols? But those dogs of strangers shall eat it'" ; similarly Syr. Arm.

the leathern cover containing the cinders and poured them upon the floor; and thereupon she took sackcloth and girded her loins; and she loosed also the net of the hair of her head and sprinkled ashes over her head. And she strewed cinders also upon the floor, and fell upon the cinders and kept beating her breast constantly with her hands and weeping all the night with groaning until the morning. And, when Asenath arose in the morning and saw, and lo! the cinders were beneath her as clay from her tears, she again fell upon her face upon the cinders till the sun set. Thus Asenath did for seven¹ days, †not tasting aught whatever.²

Asenath resolves to pray to the God of the Hebrews.

XI. And on the eighth day, when the dawn came and the birds were already chirping and the dogs barking at the passers-by, Asenath lifted up her head a little from the floor and the cinders whereon she was seated, for that she was exceeding weary³ and had lost the power of her limbs from her great humiliation;⁴ for Asenath had waxed weary and faint and her strength was failing, and thereupon she turned toward the wall, sitting under the window that looked east; and her head she ¹ I omit τὰς, which is clearly wrong.

² Lat. "of her humiliation"; Syr. Arm. ins. "and ate no bread and drank no water," Syr. adding "in the seven days of the passion of her soul and of her humiliation."

³ I read κεκμηκυία for κεκληκυία; so versions.

⁴ Syr. ins. "and fasting and abstinence"; similarly Lat. Arm. For ff. to "Asenath" (p. 40, l. 2) Slav. has "and stretched out her hands and looked toward the east and said."

laid upon her bosom, twining the fingers of her hands over her right knee ; and her mouth was shut, and she opened it not during the seven days and during the seven nights of her humiliation. And she said in her heart, not opening her mouth : " What shall I do, I the lowly one, or where shall I go? And with whom again shall I hereafter find refuge? 「or to whom shall I speak,¹ the virgin that is an orphan and desolate and abandoned by all and hated? All now have come to hate me, and among these even my father and my mother, for that I spurned the gods with loathing and made away with them and have given them 「to the poor² to be destroyed by men. For my father and my mother said : " Asenath is not our daughter." But all my kin also have come to hate me, and all men, for that I have given their gods to destruction. And I have hated every man and all who wooed me, and now in this mine humiliation I have been hated by all and they rejoice over my tribulation. But the Lord and God of the mighty Joseph hateth all who worship the idols, for that he is a jealous God and terrible, 「as I have heard,² against all who worship strange gods ; whence he hath hated me also, because I worshipped dead and deaf idols and blessed them. 「But now have I shunned their sacrifice, and my mouth hath become estranged from their table,³ and I have no

2254
 ① Lat. Syr. "or (and) what shall I say" ; Arm. om.

2255
 ② Lat. Syr. Arm. om.

2256
 ③ Lat. "and I have eaten of their sacrifices and my mouth hath been polluted by the sacrifices of idols" ; similarly, but longer, Syr. Arm.

courage to call upon the Lord God of heaven, the Most High and powerful one of the mighty Joseph, for that my mouth is polluted from the sacrifices of the idols. But I have heard many saying that the God of the Hebrews is a true God, and a living God, and a merciful God and pitiful and long-suffering and full of mercy and gentle, and one who reckoneth not the sin of a man who is humble, and especially of one who sinneth in ignorance, and convicteth not of lawlessnesses in the time of the affliction of a man that is afflicted ; accordingly I [also, the humble one,¹ will be bold and will turn to him and seek refuge with him and confess all my sins to him and pour out my petition before him, and he will have mercy on my misery. For who knoweth if he will see this mine humiliation and the desolation of my soul and pity me, and will see also the orphanhood of my wretchedness [and virginity¹ and defend me? for that, [as I hear,¹ he is himself a father of orphans and a consolation of the afflicted and a helper of the persecuted. But in any case I [also the humble one¹ will be bold and will cry to him." Then Asenath rose up from the wall where she was sitting, and raised herself upon her knees [toward the east² and ³ directed her eyes toward heaven ~~Ⓢ~~ I and opened her mouth and said to God :

57
58
① Lat Syr. Arm. om.

② Lat. "to the windows looking east"; similarly Arm. Syr. Arm. have here an insertion ; see Appendix.

267
③ Arm. ins. "raised herself upon her knees and, lifting up her hands toward the east."

2268
Asenath's Prayer.

XII. [The prayer and confession of Asenath :¹
 "Lord God of the righteous, who createdst the ages and givest life to all things, who gavest
 the breath of life to all thy creation, who broughtest
 the invisible things out into the light, who madest all things and madest manifest things that did not appear, who liftedst up the heaven and foundedst the earth upon the waters, who fixedst the great stones upon the abyss of the water, which shall not be submerged but are unto the end doing thy will,
 for that thou, Lord, saidst the word and all things came into being, and thy word, Lord, is the life of all thy creatures, to thee I flee for refuge, Lord my God, [from henceforth,² to thee will I cry, Lord, and to thee will I confess my sins, to thee will I pour out my petition, Master, and to thee will I reveal my lawlessnesses. Spare me, Lord, spare, for that I committed many sins against thee, I did lawlessness and ungodliness, I have spoken things not to be uttered, and wicked in thy sight; my mouth, Lord, hath been polluted from the sacrifices of the idols of the Egyptians, and from the table of their gods: I sinned, Lord, I sinned in thy sight, [both in knowledge and³ in ignorance I did ungodliness in that I worshipped dead and deaf idols, and I am not worthy to open my mouth unto thee, Lord,
 I the miserable Asenath daughter of Pentephres

2268
① D Lat. Syr. Arm. om.

2269
② Versions om.

2270
③ Lat. Syr. Arm. om.; Slav. om. "both . . . ignorance."

the priest, the virgin and queen, who was once proud and haughty and one that prospered in my father's¹ riches above all men, but now an orphan and desolate and abandoned of all men. To thee I flee, Lord, and to thee I offer my petition, and unto thee will I cry. Deliver me from them that pursue me, Master, before I be taken by them; for, as an infant in fear of some one fleeth to his father and mother, and his father stretcheth out his hands and catcheth him up against his breast,² ~~so also do~~ thou, Lord, stretch out thine undefiled and terrible³ hands upon me like a child-loving father, and catch me out of the hand of the suprasensual enemy.⁴ For lo! the ancient and savage and cruel lion pursueth me, for that he is father of the gods of the Egyptians, and the gods of the idol-maniacs are his children, and I have come to hate them, and I made away with them, because they are a lion's children, and I cast all the gods of the Egyptians⁴ from me and did them away, and the lion, or their father the devil, in wrath against me is trying to swallow me up. But thou, Lord, deliver me from his hands, and I shall be rescued from his mouth, lest he tear me asunder and cast me into the flame of fire, and the fire cast me into storm, and the storm prevail over me in darkness and cast me into the depth of the sea, and the great beast who is from everlasting swallow me up, and I perish for

11

- 271
272
274
275
- ① Lat. Syr. Arm. om.; Slav. om. "and . . . Lord, and."
 - ② Syr. Arm. expand the simile; see Appx.
 - ③ B versions om.
 - ④ Versions om.

ever. Deliver me, Lord, before all these things come upon me; deliver me, Master, the desolate and defenceless,¹ for that my father and my mother have denied me and said, 'Asenath is not our daughter,' because I brake their gods in pieces and made away with them, as having wholly hated them. And now I am an orphan and desolate, and I have no other hope save thee, Lord, nor another refuge save thy mercy, thou friend of men, because thou only art father of the orphans and champion of the persecuted and helper of the afflicted. Have mercy on me, Lord, and keep me pure and virgin,² the forsaken and orphan, for that thou only, Lord,² art a sweet and² good and gentle father. For what father is sweet and good as thou, Lord? For lo! all the houses of my father Pentephres which he hath given me for an inheritance are for a time and vanishing; but the houses of thine inheritance, Lord, are incorruptible and eternal."

Asenath's Prayer (continued).

XIII. "Visit, Lord, mine humiliation and have mercy on mine orphanhood and pity³ me, the afflicted. For lo! I, Master, fled from all and sought refuge with thee the only friend of men. Lo!⁴ I left all the good things of the earth and sought refuge with thee, Lord, in sackcloth and ashes, naked 2276 ① Syr. Arm. om.; Lat. om. "before . . . defenceless"; Slav. om. clause.

2277 ② Syr. Arm. om.; Slav. om. "Have . . . thou, Lord."

2278 ③ Syr. Arm. om.; Slav. om. sentence.

2277 ④ Syr. Arm. om.; Slav. om. "the . . . solitary."

「and solitary.¹ Lo! now I put off my royal robe of fine linen and of crimson stuff interwoven with gold and have put on a black tunic of mourning. Lo! I have loosed my golden girdle 「and cast it from me² and girded myself with rope and sackcloth. Lo! my diadem and my mitre I have cast from mine head and I have sprinkled myself with cinders. Lo! the floor of my chamber that was paved with many-coloured and purple stones, which was formerly moistened with ointments and was dried with bright linen cloths, is now moistened with my tears and hath been dishonoured in that it is strewn with ashes. Lo!, my Lord, from the cinders and my tears much clay hath been formed in my chamber as on a broad road. Lo!, my Lord, my royal dinner and the meats I have given to the dogs. Lo! I have 「also, Master,³ been fasting seven days and seven nights and neither ate bread nor drank water, and my mouth is dry as 「a wheel⁴ and my tongue as horn and my lips as a potsherd, and my face hath shrunk, and mine eyes have failed from shedding tears.⁵ But thou, Lord my God, deliver me from my many ignorances, and forgive me for that, being a virgin and unknowing, I have gone astray. Lo! now all⁶ the gods whom I worshipped before in ignorance I

① Syr. om.; D Arm. om. "naked . . . solitary."

② B D Arm. Slav. om.; in Syr. the account of the change of attire is shortened.

③ B D Syr. Arm. Slav. om.

④ Syr. "a grave"; Arm. "in a torpor"; Slav. om. "and my mouth . . . cinders" (p. 45, l. 8).

⑤ Syr. Arm. ins. "and my strength hath passed from me."

⑥ Syr. Arm. om.

have now known to have been deaf and dead idols, and I brake them in pieces and gave them to be trampled on by all men, and the thieves spoiled them, who were gold and silver, and with thee I sought refuge, Lord God, 'the only compassionate one and friend of men.'¹ Forgive me, Lord, for that I committed many sins against thee in ignorance and have spoken blasphemous words against my lord Joseph, and knew not, 'I the miserable,'¹ that he is thy son, Lord, since the wicked men urged by envy said to me: 'Joseph is son of a shepherd from the land of Canaan,' and I the miserable one have believed them and gone astray, and I set him at naught and have spoken wicked things about him, not knowing that he is thy son. For who among men beget or will ever beget such beauty? or who else is such as he, wise and mighty as the all-beauteous Joseph? But to thee, Lord, I commit him, because for my part I love him more than my soul. Keep him safe in the wisdom² of thy grace, and commit me to him for an handmaid and a bondwoman, that I may wash his feet and make his bed and minister to him 'and serve him,'³ and I will be a bondwoman to him for the times of my life."

The Archangel Michael visits Asenath.

XIV. And, when Asenath had ceased making confession to the Lord, lo! the morning-star also

¹ Versions om.

² Two leaves are here lost in Syr., the lacuna reaching to p. 50, l. 24.

³ Lat. Arm. om.

arose out of the heaven in the east ; and Asenath saw it and rejoiced and said : " Hath the Lord God then heard my prayer ? for that this star is a messenger and herald of the light of the great ¹ day." ² And lo ! hard by the morning-star the heaven was rent and a great and ineffable light appeared. And when she saw it Asenath fell upon her face upon the cinders, and straightway there came to her a man from heaven, ³ sending forth rays of light, and stood above her head. And, ⁴ as she lay on her face, the divine angel ⁴ ⁵ said to her, " Asenath, stand up." ⁵ And she said : " Who is he that called me ? for that the door of my chamber is shut and the tower is high, and how then hath he come into my chamber ?" And he called her again a second time, saying, " Asenath, Asenath." And she said, " Here am I, lord, tell me who thou art." And he said : " I am the chief captain of the Lord God and commander of all the host of the Most High : stand up and stand upon thy feet, that I may speak to thee my words." And she lifted up her face and saw, and lo ! a man in all things like unto Joseph, in robe and wreath and royal staff, save that his face was as lightning, and his eyes as the light of the sun, and the hairs of his head as the flame of fire ⁶ of a burning torch, ⁶ and

89
290
291
292
293
294
170

¹ Lat. Arm. om.

² Lat. ins. " And she was still looking forth " ; similarly Arm.

³ D Lat. Arm. om. ; Slav. " bright."

⁴ D Lat. Arm. Slav. om.

⁵ B D Lat. Slav. " called her." Arm. om. " stand up."

⁶ B D Lat. Arm. Slav. om.

his hands and his feet like iron shining from fire, for as it were sparks proceeded both from his hands and from his feet. Seeing these things Asenath feared and fell on her face, unable even to stand upon her feet,¹ for she became greatly afraid and all her limbs trembled. And the man said to her: "Be of good cheer, Asenath, and fear not; but stand up and stand upon thy feet, that I may speak to thee my words." Then Asenath stood up and stood upon her feet, and the angel² said to her: "Go without impediment into thy second chamber and³ lay aside the black tunic wherein thou art clad, and cast off the sackcloth from thy loins, and shake out the cinders from thine head, and wash thy face and thine hands with pure⁴ water and put on a white untouched robe⁵ and gird thy loins with the bright girdle of⁶ virginity, the double one, and come again to me, and I will speak to thee the words that are sent to thee from the Lord."⁷ Then Asenath hastened and went into her second chamber, wherein were the chests of her adorning, and opened her coffer and took a white, fine, untouched robe and put it on, having first put off the black robe, and ungirded also the rope and the sackcloth from her loins and girded herself in a bright, double girdle of her virginity, one girdle

2295
2296
① B D Lat. Slav. "before his feet"; Arm. om.

② B Arm. "the man" (Slav. here "he"), and so always; so also Syr. Slav.

2297
2298
③ B D Lat. Slav om.; Arm. "Go and."

④ B D Lat. Arm. Slav. "living."

2299
2300
⑤ Lat. ins. "new and glorious"; similarly Arm. Slav.

⑥ B D Lat. Arm. Slav. ins. "thy."

2301
⑦ Lat. Arm. "my words"; Slav. om. "from the Lord."

about her loins and another girdle about her breast. And she shook out also the cinders from her head and washed her hands and face with pure water, and she took a mantle most beautiful and fine and veiled her head.

Michael tells Asenath that she shall be Joseph's Wife.

XV. And thereupon she came to the Γ divine chief captain ¹ and stood before him, and Γ the angel of the Lord ² saith to her: "Take now the mantle from thine head,³ for that thou art to-day a pure virgin, and thine head is as of a young man." And Asenath took it from her head. And again the divine angel saith to her: "Be of good cheer, Asenath, the virgin and pure, for lo! the Lord God heard all the words of thy confession ⁴ and thy prayer, and he hath seen also the humiliation Γ and affliction ⁵ of the seven days of thine abstinence, for that from thy tears much clay hath been formed before thy face upon these cinders. Accordingly,⁵ be of good cheer, Asenath, the virgin and pure, for lo! thy name hath been written in the book of life and shall not be blotted out for ever; but from this day thou shalt be renewed Γ and refashioned ⁶ and re-quickened, and thou shalt eat the blessed bread of life and drink a cup filled with immortality

- 362 ① B Arm. Slav. "man"; D "angel."
 363 ② B Arm. Lat. "the angel"; Slav. "he."
 364 ③ Lat. Arm. ins. "and wherefore hast thou done this?"
 365 ④ Slav. om. ff. to "Accordingly."
 366 ⑤ Lat. Arm. om.
 367 ⑥ B D Lat. Arm. Slav. om.

and be anointed with the blessed unction of incorruption. Be of good cheer, Asenath, the virgin and pure, lo! the Lord God hath given thee to-day to Joseph for a bride, and he himself shall be thy bridegroom for ever. And no more henceforth shalt thou¹ be called Asenath, but thy name shall be 'City of Refuge,' for that in thee many nations shall seek refuge and they shall lodge under thy wings, and many nations shall find shelter by thy means, and upon thy walls they who cleave unto God Most High through penitence shall be kept secure; for that Penitence is daughter of the Most High, and she herself entreateth God Most High for thee every hour and for all that repent, since he is father of Penitence, and she herself is the completion and overseer of all virgins, loving you exceedingly and beseeching the Most High for you every hour, and for² all who repent she will provide a place of rest in the heavens, and she reneweth everyone who hath repented.³ And Penitence is exceeding fair, a virgin pure and gentle and mild; and therefore God Most High loveth her, and all the angels revere her, and I love her exceedingly, for that she herself also is my sister, and as she loveth you virgins I also love you. And lo! for my part I go to Joseph and will speak to him all these⁴ words concerning thee, and he will come to thee to-day and see thee and rejoice

2308

① Lat. Arm. Slav. "shall thy name."

2307

② The Gr. is corrupt. I follow Arm.

2310

③ D ins. "and herself shall minister unto them for ever"; similarly Lat. Arm.; Slav. om. l. 7-p. 49, l. 23.

2311

④ Lat. Arm. "my."

over thee and love thee and be thy bridegroom, and thou shalt be his beloved¹ bride for ever. Accordingly hear me, Asenath,² and put on a wedding robe, [the ancient and first robe³ that is yet laid up in thy chamber from of old, and put all thy choice adorning also about thee, and adorn thyself as a good bride and make thyself ready to meet him ; for lo ! he himself cometh to thee to-day and will see thee and rejoice." And, when the angel of the Lord [in the shape of a man⁴ had finished speaking these words to⁴ Asenath, she⁴ rejoiced with great joy over all the things that were spoken by him, and fell upon her face upon the earth, and made obeisance before his feet and said to him : "Blessed is the Lord thy God⁵ who sent thee to deliver me from the darkness and to bring me from the foundations of the abyss itself into the light, and blessed is thy name for ever.⁶ If then I have found grace, my lord, in thy sight and shall know that thou wilt perform all the words which thou hast said to me so that they be accomplished, let thine handmaid speak to thee." And [the angel⁷ saith [to her,⁸ "Say on." And she said :⁹ "I pray thee, lord, sit down a little time upon this bed, because this bed is pure and undefiled, for

III

12
34
316
317
324
325
36

① Lat. Arm. om. 2313
② Lat. Arm. ins. "the virgin."
③ Lat. Arm. om. 2315
④ D Lat. Arm. om.
⑤ Lat. Arm. ins. "Most High" ; Slav. om. "to him . . . ever."
⑥ Lat. Arm. have here an insertion; see Appx.
⑦ Lat. Arm. "he" ; Slav. om. "and shall . . . lord."
⑧ Lat. Arm. om.
⑨ Lat. ins. "with her hand extended, grasping his robe" ; similarly Arm.

that another man or other woman never sat upon it, and I will set before thee a table and bread, and thou shalt eat, and I will bring thee also wine old and good, the odour whereof shall reach unto heaven, and thou shalt drink thereof and thereafter shalt depart upon thy way." And he¹ saith to her: "Haste and bring it quickly."

Asenath finds a Honeycomb in her Storehouse.

XVI. And Asenath hasted and set an empty table before him; and, as she was starting to fetch bread, the divine² angel saith to her: "Bring me also an honeycomb." And she stood still and was perplexed and grieved for that she had not a bee's comb in her storehouse. And the divine³ angel saith to her: "Wherefore standest thou still?" And she said: "My lord, I will send a boy to the suburb, because the possession of our inheritance is near, and he will come and bring one⁴ quickly thence, and I will set it before thee." [The divine angel⁵ saith to her: "Enter thy storehouse and thou wilt find a bee's comb lying upon the table; take it up and bring it hither." And she said, "Lord, there is no bee's comb in my storehouse." And he said, "Go and thou wilt find." And Asenath entered her storehouse and found an honeycomb lying 2327 ① B Arm. Slav. "the man"; D Lat. "the angel"; Slav. om. ff. to "angel."

2328 ② Lat. Arm. om.

2329 ③ Lat. Arm. om; Slav. om. sentence.

2330 ④ Lat. Arm. Slav. "an honeycomb."

2331 ⑤ D Lat. "The angel"; B Slav. "The man"; Arm. "Who."

upon the table; and the comb was great and white like snow and full of honey, and that honey was as the dew of heaven, and the odour thereof as the odour of life. Then Asenath wondered and said in herself: "Is this comb from the mouth of this man himself?" And Asenath took that comb and brought it and set it forth upon the table, and the angel said to her: "Why is it that thou saidst, 'There is no honeycomb in mine house,' and lo! thou hast brought it me?" And she¹ said: "Lord, I have never put an honeycomb in mine house, but as thou saidst so it hath been made. Came this forth from thy mouth? for that the odour thereof is as the odour of ointment."² And the man smiled at 「the woman's³ understanding. Then he calleth her to himself, and, 「when she came,⁴ he stretched out his right hand and took hold of her head, and, 「when he shook her head with his right hand,⁵ Asenath feared the angel's hand greatly, for that sparks proceeded from his hands after the manner of red-hot⁶ iron, and accordingly she was all the time gazing with much fear and trembling at the angel's hand. And he smiled and said: "Blessed art thou, Asenath, because the ineffable mysteries of

32 ① B D versions "Asenath."

33 ② Lat. Syr. Arm. "thy mouth"; Slav. "ointment like thy mouth."

34 ③ Lat. Syr. Arm. "Asenath's"; Slav. om. "smiled . . . came, he."

35 ④ Lat. Syr. Arm. om.

36 ⑤ Versions om.; Slav. om. ff. to "smiled and."

37 ⑥ I follow Syr. Arm.; ὀχλάζοντος ("crowding") must be wrong.

God have been revealed to thee ; and blessed are all who cleave to the Lord God in penitence, because they shall eat of this comb, for that this comb is the spirit of life, and this the bees of the paradise of delight have made from the dew of the roses of life that are in the paradise of God and every flower, and of it eat the angels and all the elect of God and all the sons of the Most High, and whosoever shall eat of it shall not die for ever." Then the divine¹ angel stretched out his right hand and took a small piece from the comb and ate, and with his own hand placed what was left in Asenath's mouth and said to her, "Eat," and she ate. And the angel saith to her: "Lo! now thou hast eaten the bread of life and hast drunk the cup of immortality and been anointed with the unction of incorruption ; lo! now to-day thy flesh produceth flowers of life from the fountain² of the Most High, and thy bones shall be made fat like the cedars of the paradise of delight of God and unwearying powers shall maintain thee ; accordingly thy youth shall not see old age, nor shall thy beauty fail for ever, but thou shalt be as a walled mother-city of all."³ And the angel incited the comb,⁴ and many bees arose from the cells of that ① B D versions om. ; Lat. "he" for "the . . . angel."

② Syr. Arm. "land" ; sentence shortened in Lat. ; Slav. om. "and said . . . comb."

③ Lat. Syr. Arm. ins. (with small variants) "who seek refuge in the King and Lord God of ages." A longer insertion follows in B D versions ; see Appx.

④ Syr. "said to the comb, 'Come and appear forthwith, great swarm of bees that are in the honeycomb'" ; Lat. Arm. shorter.

comb, and the cells were numberless, tens of thousands of tens of thousands and thousands of thousands. And the bees also were white like snow, and their wings as purple and crimson stuff and as scarlet;¹ and they had also sharp stings and injured no man. Then all those bees encircled Asenath from feet to head, and other great bees like their queens arose from the cells, and they circled round upon her face and upon her lips, and made a comb upon her mouth and upon her lips like the comb that lay before the angel; and all those bees ate from the comb that was upon Asenath's mouth. And the angel said to the bees, "Go now to your place." Then all the bees rose and flew and departed to heaven; but as many as wished to injure Asenath all fell upon the earth and died. And thereupon the angel stretched his staff over the dead bees and said to them: "Rise and depart ye also into your place." Then all the dead bees rose and departed into the court that adjoined Asenath's house and took up their lodging upon the fruit-bearing trees.

Michael departs.

XVII. And the angel saith to Asenath, "Hast thou seen this thing?" And she said, "Yea, my lord, I have seen all these things." The divine² angel saith to her: "So shall be all my words as ¹ Syr. ins. "and fine linen interwoven with gold, and a crown of gold was on the head of each one of them"; latter part also in Arm.

² B D versions om.; Lat. "He" for "The . . . angel."

many as I have spoken to thee to-day." Then the angel ¹of the Lord ²for the third time stretched forth his right hand and touched the side of the comb, and straightway fire came up from the table and devoured the comb, but the table it injured not a whit. And, when much fragrance had come forth from the burning of the comb and filled the chamber, Asenath said to the divine ³angel: "Lord, I have seven virgins who were brought up with me from my youth and were born on one night with me, who wait upon me, and I love them all ⁴as my sisters. I will call them and thou shalt bless them too, even as thou blessedst me." And the angel said to her: "Call them." Then Asenath called the seven virgins and set them before the angel, and the angel said to them: "The Lord God Most High shall bless you, and ye shall be ⁵[pillars] of refuge of seven cities, and all the elect of that city who dwell together shall [upon you rest] ⁶for ever." And ⁷after these things the divine ⁷angel saith to Asenath: "Take away this table." And, when Asenath turned to remove the table, straightway he departed from her eyes, and Asenath saw as it were a chariot with four horses that were going eastward to heaven, and the chariot was as a flame of fire, and the horses as lightning, and the angel was standing ~~2248~~ ① B versions om.

~~2250~~ ③ B D versions om.

~~2352~~ ⑤ Lacuna in text; Lat. Syr. Arm. "seven pillars in the city" (Lat. Syr. ins. "of refuge"); Slav. om. "and ye . . . rest."

~~2353~~ ⑥ Lacuna in text; suppl. from Lat. Syr. Arm.

~~2354~~ ⑦ B D versions om.

2349 ② See p. 81, n. 4.

2351 ④ Versions om.

above that chariot. Then Asenath said: "Silly and foolish am I, the lowly one, for that I have spoken as that a man came into my chamber [†]from heaven,¹ and I knew not that God came into it; and lo! now he goeth back to heaven to his place." And she said in herself: "Be gracious, Lord, to thy bondmaid, [†]and spare thine handmaid,² because, for my part, I have in ignorance spoken rash things before thee."

Asenath's Face is transformed.

XVIII. And, while Asenath was yet speaking these words to herself, lo! a young man, one of the servants of Joseph,³ saying: "Joseph, the mighty man of God, cometh to you to-day."⁴ And straightway Asenath called [†]the overseer of her house⁵ and said to him: "Haste and prepare mine house and make a good dinner ready, for that Joseph, the mighty man of God, cometh to us to-day."⁶ And [†]the overseer of the house⁵ when he saw her (for her face had shrunk from the seven days' affliction and weeping and abstinence) sorrowed and wept; and he took hold of her right hand and kissed it tenderly and said: "What aileth thee, my lady,⁷ that thy face is thus 2355 ① Lat. Syr. Arm. om.; Slav. om. "and the chariot . . . place."

356 ② B D versions om.

357 ③ Lat. Syr. Arm. "Pentephres" (probably rightly).

358 ④ Lat. ins. "for his forerunner standeth at the gates of our court"; similarly Syr. Arm.; Lat. om. ff. to p. 58, l. 2.

359 ⑤ Syr. Arm. "her foster-father"; so always.

360 ⑥ Slav. om. ff. to "hasted" (p. 56 l. 6).

361 ⑦ Syr. Arm. "daughter."

shrunken?" And she said: "I have had great pain about mine head, and sleep departed from mine eyes." Then the overseer of the house went away and prepared the house and the dinner. And Asenath remembered the angel's words and his injunctions, and hasted and entered her second chamber, where the chests of her adorning were, and opened her great coffer and brought out her¹ first robe like lightning to behold and put it on; and she girded herself also with a girdle "bright and² royal that was of gold and precious stones, and on her hands she put golden bracelets, and upon her feet golden buskins,³ and a precious⁴ ornament about her neck, and a golden wreath she put about her head; and on the wreath as upon its front was a great sapphire stone, and "round the great stone² six stones of great price, and with a "very marvellous⁵ mantle she veiled her head.⁶ And, when Asenath remembered the words of the overseer of her house, for that he said to her that her face had shrunk, she sorrowed exceedingly, and groaned and said: "Woe is me, the lowly one, since my face is shrunken. Joseph will see me thus and I shall be set at naught by him." And she saith to her handmaid, "Bring me pure water from the fountain." And, when she had 2362 ① For ff. to "court" (p. 58, l. 1) Slav. has "wedding-raiment, and decked herself like a bride for the marriage-chamber."

2363 ② Syr. Arm. om.

7364 ③ Syr. Arm. "chains."

2365 ④ Syr. "varied with many precious stones"; similarly Arm.

2366 ⑤ Syr. Arm. "bride's"; B D om.

2367 ⑥ Syr. Arm. ins. "and she took a royal" (Syr. om.) "staff in her hand."

brought it, she poured it out into the basin, and, bending down to wash her face, she seeth her own face shining like the sun, and her eyes as the morning-star when it riseth,¹ and her cheeks as a star of heaven,² and her lips as red roses,³ the hairs of her head were as the vine that bloometh among his fruits in the paradise of God, her neck as an all-variegated cypress.⁴ And Asenath, when she saw these things,⁵ marvelled in herself at the sight and rejoiced with exceeding great joy and washed not her face, for she said, "Lest I wash off this great and comely beauty." The overseer of her house then came back to tell her, "All things are done that thou commandedst"; and, when he beheld her, he feared greatly and was seized with trembling for a long time, and he fell at her feet and began to say: "What is this, my mistress? What is this beauty that surroundeth thee that is great and marvellous? Hath the Lord God of Heaven chosen thee as bride for his son Joseph?"

Joseph returns and is received by Asenath.

XIX. And, while they were yet speaking these things, a boy came saying to Asenath: "Lo!

① Arm. ins. "and the ways of her feet as even and graceful furrows."

② Syr. "as the fields of the Most High, and on them was she red as a man's blood"; Arm. ". . . red as fragments of a pomegranate."

③ Syr. "a rose of life plucked from its stem, and her teeth as arms prepared for battle"; Arm. "a rose sprouting when it cometh out from the buds (?), her teeth as a graceful tower" (om. ff. similes).

④ Syr. "the islands of rest of the angels that are in heaven."

⑤ Syr. Arm. "herself in the water."

2572

Joseph standeth before the doors of our court." Then Asenath hastened and went down the stairs from her loft¹ with the seven virgins to meet Joseph and stood in the porch of her house. And, Joseph having come into the court,² the gates were shut and all strangers remained outside. And Asenath came out from the porch to meet Joseph, and when he saw her he marvelled at her beauty, and said to her: "Who art thou, damsel?"³ Quickly tell me." And she saith to him: "I, lord,³ am thine handmaid Asenath; all the idols I have cast away from me and they perished. And a man came to me to-day from heaven and hath given me bread of life and I ate, and I drank a blessed cup, and he said to me: 'I have given thee for a bride to Joseph, and he himself shall be thy bridegroom for ever; and thy name shall not be called Asenath, but it shall be called "City of Refuge," and the Lord God shall reign over many nations,⁴ and through thee shall they⁵ seek refuge with God Most High.' And the man said: 'I will go also to Joseph that I may speak into his ears these words concerning thee.' And now thou knowest, lord, if that man hath come to thee and if he hath spoken to thee concerning me." Then Joseph saith to Asenath: "Blessed art thou, woman,³ of God Most High, and blessed is thy 2373 ① Syr. Arm. om.; in Lat. the sentence is shortened.

2374 ② For ff. to "seated him" (p. 59, l. ult.) Slav. has "sat."

2375 ③ Lat. Syr. Arm. om.

2376 ④ Lat. "and the Lord God is thy King for ever"; Syr. Arm. om.

2377 ⑤ Lat. Arm. "many nations"; Syr. "peoples and kindreds and families and nations."

name for ever, for that the Lord God hath laid the foundations of thy walls, and the sons of the living God shall dwell in thy city of refuge, and the Lord God shall reign over them for ever. For that man came ¹from heaven to me to-day and said these words to me concerning thee. And now come hither to me, thou virgin and pure, and wherefore standest thou afar off?" Then Joseph stretched out his hands and ¹embraced Asenath, and Asenath Joseph, and they kissed one another for a long time,² and both lived again in their spirit.³ And Joseph kissed Asenath and gave her the spirit of life, then the second time he gave her the spirit of wisdom, and the third time he kissed her tenderly and gave her the spirit of truth.

Pentephres returns and wishes to betroth Asenath to Joseph, but Joseph resolves to ask her hand from Pharaoh.

XX. And, when they had clasped one another round for a long time and intertwined the chains of their hands, Asenath said to Joseph: "Come hither, lord, and enter our house, for that on my part I have prepared our house and a great dinner." And she took hold of his right hand and led him into her house and seated him on

376
377
① Lat. Syr. Arm. om.

② Syr. "by the beckoning of his eyes called A., and A. also stretched out her hands and ran to J. and fell on his neck and embraced him"; Lat. "embraced A. and they kissed one another" (om. ff. to l. 22); Arm. "called A. and she came to J. and fell on his neck."

380
③ Syr. Arm. ins. "and were joined to one another."

the chair of Pentephres her father ; and she brought water to wash his feet. And Joseph said : " Let one of the virgins come and wash my feet." And Asenath said to him : " Nay, lord, for that henceforth thou art my lord and I am thine handmaid. And wherefore seekest thou this, that another virgin should wash thy feet? for that thy feet are my feet, and thine hands mine hands, and thy soul my soul, and another shall not wash thy feet." And she constrained him and washed his feet.¹ Then Joseph took hold of her right hand and kissed her tenderly and Asenath kissed his head tenderly, and thereupon he seated her at his right hand. Her father and mother and all her kindred then came from the possession of their inheritance,¹ and they saw her sitting with Joseph and clad in a wedding-garment. And they marvelled at her beauty and rejoiced and glorified God who quickeneth the dead. And after these things they ate and drank ; and, all having made cheer, Pentephres said to Joseph : " To-morrow I will call all the princes and satraps of all the land of Egypt, and will make a wedding for you, and thou shalt take my daughter Asenath to wife." But Joseph said : " I go to-morrow to Pharaoh the king, for that he himself is my father and appointed me ruler over all this land, and I will speak to him concerning Asenath, and he will give her to me to wife." And Pentephres said to him : " Go in peace."

¹ Lat. Syr. Arm. have here an addition ; see Appx.

~~2381~~

~~2384~~

←← 84

The Marriage of Joseph and Asenath.

XXI. And Joseph stayed that day with Pentephres, and he went not in to Asenath, for that he was wont to say: "It is not meet for a man who worshippeth God to sleep with his wife before his marriage." And Joseph rose early and departed to Pharaoh and said to him: "Give me Asenath, daughter of Pentephres, priest of Heliopolis, to wife." And Pharaoh rejoiced with great joy, and he¹ saith to Joseph: "Lo! hath not this one been betrothed unto thee to wife from eternity? Accordingly let her be thy wife henceforth and unto time eternal." Then Pharaoh sent and called Pentephres, and Pentephres brought Asenath and set her before Pharaoh; and Pharaoh when he saw her marvelled at her beauty and said: "The Lord God of Joseph shall bless thee, child, and this thy beauty shall remain to eternity, for that the Lord God of Joseph chose thee as bride for him: for Joseph is as the son of the Most High, and thou shalt be called his bride² henceforth and for ever." And after these things Pharaoh took Joseph and Asenath and set golden wreaths upon their heads, which were in his house from of old and from ancient times, and Pharaoh set Asenath at Joseph's right hand. And Pharaoh put his hands upon their heads¹ and said: "The Lord God Most High shall bless you and shall multiply ¹and magnify² and glorify you unto time eternal." Then Pharaoh turned them round to face one another and brought them mouth to mouth, and they kissed one another. And Pharaoh made a wedding for Joseph and a great dinner and much drinking during seven days, and he called together all the rulers of Egypt and all the kings of the nations, having made proclamation in the land of Egypt, saying: "Every man who shall do work during the seven days of the wedding of Joseph and Asenath shall surely die." And, while the wedding was going on, and when the dinner was ended, Joseph went in to Asenath, and Asenath conceived by Joseph and bare Manasses and Ephraim his brother in Joseph's house.³

¹ Lat. Syr. Arm. om. ; Slav. om. all to "Pharaoh" (l. 13).

² Or "his daughter-in-law"; Slav. "daughter of the Most High"; Syr. "daughter of the Lord and his bride"; similarly Arm.; Lat. om. all after "him" to end of sentence.

Asenath is introduced to Jacob.

XXII. And, when the seven years of plenty had passed, the seven years of famine began to come. And, when Jacob heard about Joseph his son, he came into Egypt with all his kindred in the second year of the famine, in the second month, on the twenty-first of the month, and settled in Geshem. And Asenath said to Joseph: "I will go and see thy father, for that thy father Israel is

¹ Lat. ins. "and his right hand was on Asenath's head"; similarly Arm.

² Versions om.

³ Lat. Syr. Arm. have here an insertion; see Appx.

as my "father and God."¹ And Joseph said to her: "Thou shalt go with me and see my father." And Joseph and Asenath came to Jacob in the land of Geshem, and Joseph's brethren met them and made obeisance to them upon their faces on the earth. Then both went in to Jacob; and Jacob was sitting upon his bed, and he himself was an old man in a lusty old age. And, when Asenath saw him, she marvelled at his beauty, for that Jacob was beautiful to behold exceedingly and his old age as the youth of a comely man, and all his head was white like snow, and the hairs of his head were all close and thick exceedingly,² and his beard white reaching to his breast, his eyes cheerful and glistening, his sinews and his shoulders and his arms as of an angel, his thighs and his calves and his feet as of a giant.³ Then Asenath, when she saw him thus, marvelled "and fell down"⁴ and made obeisance on her face upon the earth. And Jacob said to Joseph: "Is this my daughter-in-law, thy wife? Blessed shall she be of God Most High." Then Jacob called Asenath to himself and blessed her and kissed her tenderly; and Asenath stretched out her hands and took hold of Jacob's neck and hung on to his neck and kissed him tenderly.⁵ And after

103
04
05
06
07
① Lat. Syr. Arm. "God"; Slav. "father."

② Syr. ins. "as of an Ethiopian"; Arm. "as of an Indian"; Lat. om. clause.

③ Syr. ins. "and Jacob was as a man who fighteth with God"; similarly Arm.

④ Lat. Syr. Arm. om.; Slav. om. all to "neck."

⑤ Syr. ins. "as one who returneth from war to his house after a long time"; similarly Arm.

these things they ate and drank. And thereupon both Joseph and Asenath went to their house; and Simeon and Levi, the sons of Leah, alone conducted them forth, but the sons of Balla and Zelpha, the handmaids of Leah and Rachel, did not join in conducting them forth, for that they envied and detested them. And Levi was at Asenath's right and Simeon¹ at her left. And Asenath took hold of Levi's hand, for that she loved him exceedingly above all Joseph's brethren and as a prophet and a worshipper of God and one who feared the Lord. For he was an understanding man and a prophet of the Most High, and he himself saw letters written in heaven and read them² and revealed them to Asenath in secret; for that Levi himself also loved Asenath much and saw the place of her rest in the highest.³

Pharaoh's Son tries to induce Simeon and Levi to kill Joseph.

XXIII. And it came to pass as Joseph and Asenath were passing by, when they were going to Jacob,⁴ Pharaoh's firstborn son saw them from the wall, and, when he saw Asenath, he became mad upon her by reason of her surpassing⁵

2408 ① D versions "Joseph."

2409 ② Syr. "written with the finger of God, and he knew the hidden things of God that were revealed to him." In Lat. Arm. the sentence is much shorter.

2410 ③ Syr. ins. "and her eternal walls of adamant and her foundations firmly laid aforetime on the stone of the rock in the seven heavens"; similarly Arm.

2411 ④ B Syr. Arm. Slav. om.; Lat. "Ph.'s house" for "Jacob."

2412 ⑤ Versions om.

beauty.¹ Then Pharaoh's son sent messengers, and called Simeon and Levi to him; and, when they came and stood before him, Pharaoh's firstborn son saith to them: "I for my part know that ye are to-day mighty men above all men upon the earth, and with these right hands of yours the city of the Sicimites was overthrown, and with your two swords 30,000 warriors were cut down. And I to-day will take you to myself as companions and give you much gold and silver and serving-men and handmaids and houses and great inheritances, and contend ye on my side and do me kindness;² for that I received great despite from your brother Joseph, since he himself took Asenath to wife, and this woman was betrothed to me from of old. And now come with me, and I will fight against Joseph to slay him with my sword, and I will take Asenath to wife, and ye shall be to me as brethren and faithful friends. But, if ye shall not hearken to my words, I will slay you with my sword."³ And, when he had said these things, he drew out his sword and showed it to them.⁴ And Simeon was a bold and daring man, and he thought to lay his right hand upon the hilt of his

413 ¹ Syr. ins. "saying, 'Wherefore is it thus?'" ; Arm. "and said, 'It shall not be thus'" ; Lat. "and was distressed, and he knew not what to do."

414 ² Syr. "only I require you to do one thing for me in love" ; similarly Lat. Arm. ; Slav. om. "and with . . . sword."

415 ³ Syr. "hesitate and hinder and reject this thing, lo ! this my lance-point shall be drawn against you" ; similarly Lat. Arm. ; Lat. om. ff. to p. 66, l. 10 ; Slav. (for "ye shall be . . . for evil") "I will do for you whatever you wish."

416 ⁴ Syr. Arm. have here an insertion ; see Appx.

sword and draw it from the sheath thereof and smite Pharaoh's son for that he had spoken hard words to them. Levi then saw the thought of his heart, because he was a prophet,¹ and trod with his foot on Simeon's right foot and pressed it, signing to him to cease from his wrath. And Levi was saying quietly to Simeon: "Wherefore art thou angry against this man? We are men who worship God and it is not meet for us to render evil for evil." Then Levi said to Pharaoh's son openly with mildness of heart: "Wherefore speaketh our lord these words? We are men who worship God, and our father is a friend of God Most High, and our brother is as a son of God. And how shall we do this wicked thing, to sin in the sight of our God and of our father Israel and in the sight of our brother Joseph? And now hear my words. It is not meet for a man who worshippeth God to injure any man in any wise; and, if any wisheth to injure a man who worshippeth God, that man who worshippeth God avengeth not himself upon him, for that there is no sword in his hands.² And do thou beware of speaking any more these words about our brother Joseph. But, if thou continuest in thine evil counsel, lo! our swords are drawn against thee." Then Simeon and Levi drew their swords from their sheaths and said: "Seest thou now these swords? With these two swords the 2417 — ① Syr. ins. "and a seer and his eyes were open"; Arm. "and saw by the purity of his mind and read with his eyes what was written in a man's heart."

2418 — ② Syr. "sword in hand"; Arm. "because there is a sword in his hands"; B D Lat. Slav. om. sentence.

Lord punished the despite of the Sicimites, wherewith they did despite to the sons of Israel through our sister Dinah, whom Sychem the son of Hamor defiled." And Pharaoh's son, when he saw the swords drawn, feared exceedingly and trembled over all his body, for that they glittered like a flame of fire, and his eyes became dim, and he fell upon his face on the earth beneath their feet.
Then Levi stretched out his right hand and took hold of him, saying: "Stand up and fear not, only beware of speaking any more any evil word concerning our brother Joseph." And so both Simeon and Levi went out from before his face.

Pharaoh's Son conspires with Dan and Gad to kill Joseph and seize Asenath.

XXIV. Pharaoh's son then continued to be full of fear and grief for that he feared Joseph's brethren, and again he was exceedingly mad by reason of Asenath's beauty, and grieved greatly.
Then his serving-men say in his ear: "Lo! the sons of Balla and the sons of Zelpha, the handmaids of Leah and Rachel, Jacob's wives, are at great enmity against Joseph and Asenath and hate them; these will be unto thee in all things according to thy will." Straightway therefore Pharaoh's son sent messengers and called them, and they came to him [at the first hour of the¹ night, and they stood in his presence, and he saith to them: "[I have learned from many that² ye

① B D Syr. Arm. Slav. "by"; Lat. om. l. 27-p. 68, l. 9.

② Syr. Arm. om; Slav. "I see that."

are mighty men." And Dan and Gad, the elder brethren, said to him: "Let my lord now speak to his serving-men what he wisheth, that thy serving-men may hear and we may do according to thy will." Then Pharaoh's son rejoiced with exceeding great joy and said to his serving-men: "Withdraw now for a short space from me, for that I have secret speech to hold with these men." And they all withdrew. Then Pharaoh's son lied, and he saith to them: "Lo! now blessing and death are before your faces; do ye therefore take the blessing rather than the death, because ye are mighty men and will not die as women; but be brave and avenge yourselves upon your enemies. For I have heard Joseph your brother saying to Pharaoh my father: 'Dan and Gad and Nephthalim and Asher¹ are not my brethren, but children of my father's handmaids: I wait therefore for my father's death, and will blot them out from the earth and all their issue, lest they should inherit with us, because they are children of handmaids. For these also sold me to the Ishmaelites, and I will render unto them again according to their despite which they wickedly committed against me; only my father shall die.' And my father Pharaoh commended him for these things and said to him: 'Thou hast well spoken, child. Accordingly, take from me mighty men and proceed against them according to what they wrought against thee,² and 2421 ① Syr. "The sons of B. and Z.;" Lat. Arm. "they"; Slav. "D. and G."

2422 ② Syr. Arm. om.; Lat. om. "Thou . . . thee, and."

I will be a helper to thee.'” And when Dan and Gad heard these things from Pharaoh's son they were much troubled, and grieved exceedingly, and they said to him: “We pray thee, lord, help us; [for henceforth we are thy slaves and bondmen and will die with thee.”¹ And Pharaoh's son said: “I will be a helper to you if ye also will hearken to my words.” And they said to him: “[Command us what thou wishest² and we will do according to thy will.” And Pharaoh's son saith to them: “I will slay my father Pharaoh this night, for that Pharaoh is as Joseph's father and said to him that he would help against you; and do ye slay Joseph, and I will take Asenath to myself to wife, and ye shall be my brethren and fellow-heirs of all my possessions. Only do this thing.” And Dan and Gad said to him: “We are thy serving-men to-day and will do all things that thou hast commanded us. And we have heard Joseph saying to Asenath: ‘Go to-morrow to the possession of our inheritance, for that it is the season of the vintage’; and he sent six hundred men mighty to war with her and fifty forerunners. Now therefore hear us and we will speak unto our lord.” And they spake to him all their secret words. Then Pharaoh's son gave the four brethren five hundred men each and appointed them their chiefs and leaders. And Dan and Gad said to him: “We are thy serving-men to-day and will do all the things that thou hast commanded us, and we will set forth by night and lie in wait in the ravine and hide ourselves in the thicket of the reeds; and do thou take with thyself fifty bowmen upon horses and go a long way before us,¹ and Asenath will come and fall into our hands, and we will cut down the men that are with her, and she herself will flee before with her chariot and fall into thine hands and thou shalt do to her as thy soul desireth; and after these things we will slay Joseph also while he is grieving for Asenath; likewise also his children will we slay before his eyes." Pharaoh's firstborn² son then, when he heard these things, rejoiced exceedingly, and he sent them forth and two thousand fighting men with them. And when they came to the ravine they hid themselves in the thicket of the reeds, and they divided into four companies,³ and took up their station on the far side of the ravine as in the front part,⁴ five hundred men on this side of the road⁵ and on that, and on the near side⁶ of the ravine likewise the rest remained, and they themselves also took up their station in the thicket of the reeds, five hundred men on this side and on that of the road;⁶ and between them was a broad and wide road.

423 ¹B Lat. Syr. Arm. om.; Slav. om. all to “him.”

24 ²Syr. “Lo! we stand before thee as thy bondsmen. Speak”; similarly Lat. Arm. Slav.

2425

① I follow D Lat. Syr. Arm.; Batiffol "her." Slav. om.

2426

② B D versions om.

2427

③ B D Lat. Syr. Arm. om.; Slav. om. "and they . . . companies."

2428

④ Versions om.

2429

⑤ Versions om.; Slav. om. ff. to "road."

2430

⑥ Lat. Syr. Arm. om.

Pharaoh's Son goes to kill his Father, but is not admitted. Nephthalim and Asher protest to Dan and Gad against the Conspiracy.

XXV. Then Pharaoh's son rose up the same night and came to his father's bed-chamber to slay him with the sword. His father's guards thereupon hindered him from coming in to his father and said to him: "What commandest thou, lord?" And Pharaoh's son said to them: "I wish to see my father, for that I am going to gather the vintage of my new-planted vineyard." And the guards said to him: "Thy father suffereth pain and lay awake the whole night and now resteth, and he said to us that no one was to come in to him 'not even if it is my firstborn son.'" And he on hearing these things went away in wrath and straightway¹ took mounted bowmen fifty in number and went away before them as Dan and Gad had said to him.² And the younger brethren Nephthalim and Asher spake to their elder brethren Dan and Gad, saying: "Wherefore do ye on your part again work wickedness against your father Israel and against your brother Joseph? And God preserveth him as the apple of an eye. Lo! did ye not once sell Joseph? and he is king to-day of all the land [of Egypt³ and food-giver. Now therefore, if ye again wish to work wickedness against him, he will [cry unto the 2432 ① B D versions om.

431

② For ff. to p. 75, l. 9, Arm. has a short epitome only. Lat. om. rest of ch.

433 ③ D Syr. Slav. om.

Most High,¹ and he will send fire from heaven and it will devour you, and the angels of God will fight against you." Then² the elder brethren were moved to anger against them and said: "And shall we die as women? 'Far be it.'" And they went out to meet Joseph and Asenath.³

The Conspirators kill Asenath's Guards and she flees.

XXVI. And Asenath rose in the morning and said to Joseph: "I am going to the possession of our inheritance as thou hast said; but my soul feareth exceedingly⁴ for that thou art parting from me." And Joseph said to her: "Be of good cheer and be not afraid, but rather go away 'rejoicing, in dread of no man whatsoever,⁵ for that the Lord is with thee and he himself will preserve thee as the apple of an eye from every evil. And I will set forth for my giving of food and will give to all the men 'in the city,⁶ and no man shall perish of hunger in the land 'of Egypt."⁶ Then Asenath departed on her way, and Joseph 'for his giving of food.⁷ And, when Asenath reached the place of the ravine with the six hundred men, suddenly they 'who were with Pharaoh's son⁶ came forth from their ambush and joined battle with those who were with Asenath, and cut them all down

2434
2435
2437
2438
2440
① Syr. "go up to heaven"; Slav. "cry to heaven."

② B D Syr. Slav. "And." 2436 ③ Syr. Slav. om.

④ B D Lat. Syr. om.; Slav. om. "but . . . whatsoever."

⑤ B D Lat. Syr. om. 2439 ⑥ Lat. Syr. Slav. om.

⑦ Lat. Syr. om.; Slav. om. clause.

with their swords, and all her forerunners they slew, but Asenath fled with her chariot.¹ Then Levi, 「the son of Leah, knew all these things² 「by the spirit³ 「as a prophet and² told his brethren of Asenath's danger, and straightway³ each of them took his sword upon his thigh and their shields upon their arms and the spears in their right hands and pursued after Asenath with great speed. And, as Asenath was fleeing before, lo! Pharaoh's son met her and fifty horsemen with him: and Asenath, when she saw him, was seized with very great fear and was trembling, and she called upon the name of the Lord her God.

The Men with Pharaoh's Son and those with Dan and Gad are killed; and the four Brothers flee to the Ravine and their Swords are stricken from their Hands.

XXVII. And Benjamin was sitting with her on the chariot on the right side;⁴ and Benjamin was a strong⁵ lad of about nineteen years, and upon him was ineffable beauty and might as of a lion's whelp, and he was also one who feared God exceedingly. Then Benjamin leaped down from the chariot, and took a round stone from the ravine and filled his hand and hurled at Pharaoh's son and smote his left temple, and wounded him with a grievous wound, and he fell from his horse upon

141
143
144
145
① Lat. om. rest of ch. 2442

② B D. Syr. Slav. om.

③ From this point to the end Lat. has an epitome only.

④ Syr. Slav. om.

⑤ Syr. Slav. om.

the earth half-dead.¹ And thereupon Benjamin, having run up on to a rock, saith to Asenath's chariot-man: "Give me stones from the ravine." And he gave him fifty² stones. And Benjamin hurled the stones and slew the fifty³ men who were with Pharaoh's son, all the stones sinking in through their temples. Then the sons of Leah, Reuben and Simeon, Levi and Judah, Issachar and Zebulon, pursued after the men who had lain in wait against Asenath and fell upon them unawares and cut them all down; and the six men slew two thousand and seventy-six men. And the sons of Balla and Zelpha fled from their face and said: "We have perished at the hands of our brethren, and Pharaoh's son hath also died by the hand of Benjamin the lad, and all who were with him perished by the hand of the boy Benjamin. Accordingly, therefore, come let us slay Asenath and Benjamin and flee to the thicket of these reeds." And they came against Asenath⁴ holding their swords drawn covered with blood. And Asenath when she saw them feared greatly and said: "Lord God, who quickenedst me and deliveredst me⁵ from the idols and the corruption of⁵ death, even as thou saidst to me that my soul shall live for ever, deliver me now also from these wicked men." And the Lord God heard Asenath's voice, and straightway the swords of the adversaries fell from their hands upon the earth and were turned into ashes.

2446
 ① Syr. Slav. om.

2447
 ① B D Syr. Slav. om.

② Syr. "48."

2448
 ③ Syr. Slav. "48."

2450
 ⑤ Syr. Slav. om.

Dan and Gad are spared at Asenath's Entreaty.

XXVIII. And the sons of Balla and Zelpha, when they saw [the strange miracle that¹ had been wrought,² feared and said: "The Lord fighteth against us on Asenath's behalf." Then they fell upon their faces on the earth and made obeisance to Asenath and said: "Have mercy on us thy bondmen, for that thou art our mistress and queen. We wickedly committed evil deeds against thee [and against our brother Joseph,² but the Lord requited us according to our works. Therefore we thy bondmen pray thee, have mercy on us [the lowly and miserable³ and deliver us from the hands of our brethren, for that they will make themselves avengers of the despite done to thee and their swords are against us.⁴ [Accordingly be gracious to thy bondmen, mistress, before them."² And Asenath said to them: "Be of good cheer and be not ye afraid of your brethren, for that they themselves are men who worship God and fear the Lord;⁵ but go into the thicket of these reeds until I shall appease them on your behalf and stay their wrath on account of the great crimes which ye on your part have dared to commit against them. But the Lord [see and⁶ judge between me and you."

2451 1 B D "what"; Syr. "this"; Slav. "this great thing."

2452 2 Syr. Slav. om. 2453 3 B D Syr. Slav. om.

2454 4 A B ins. "And we know that our brethren are men who worship God and render not evil for evil to any man."

455 5 Syr. Arm. ins. "and are humble before every man."

456 6 B D Syr. Arm. Slav. om.

Then Dan and Gad fled into the thicket of the reeds; and¹ their brethren,² Leah's sons, came running like stags with great haste³ against them.⁴ And Asenath stepped down from the chariot that was her covert and gave them her right hand with tears, and they themselves fell down and made obeisance to her on the earth and wept with a loud voice; and they continued asking for their brethren the sons of the handmaids to put them to death. And Asenath said to them: "I pray you, spare your brethren, and render not to them evil for evil. For the Lord saved me from them and shattered their daggers and⁵ swords from out their hands,⁶ and lo! they have melted and were burned to ashes upon the earth⁵ like wax from before fire, and this is sufficient for us⁷ that the Lord fighteth for us against them.⁶ Accordingly do ye spare your brethren,⁸ for that they are your brethren and the blood of your father Israel." And Simeon said to her: "Wherefore speaketh our mistress good words on behalf of her enemies? Nay but rather⁵ we will cut them down limb from limb with our swords, for that they devised evil things concerning⁹ our brother Joseph¹⁰ and our father Israel and against thee, our 2457 ① B D Syr. Arm. ins. "lo!"; Slav. om. "Then . . . blessed him" (p. 78, l. 15).

2458 ② B D Syr. Arm. om. 2459 ③ B D Syr. Arm. Slav. om.

2460 ④ Syr. Arm. om. 2461 ⑤ B D Syr. Arm. om.

2462 ⑥ Syr. Arm. om. 2463 ⑦ Syr. "for them"; Arm. om.

2464 ⑧ Syr. Arm. "them."

2465 ⑨ Syr. ins. "us and"; Arm. "you and."

2466 ⑩ D ins. "lo! this is the second time"; similarly Syr. (Arm. "third").

mistress,¹ to-day." Then Asenath stretched out her right hand and touched Simeon's beard and kissed him tenderly and said: "In no wise, brother, render evil for evil to thy neighbour, for that the Lord will avenge this despite. They themselves, ye know, are your brethren and the offspring of your father Israel,² and they fled from afar from your face. 「Accordingly grant them pardon."³ Then Levi came up to her and kissed her right hand tenderly, for that he knew that she was fain to save 「the men from their brethren's anger that they should not slay them.⁴ And they themselves were nigh at hand⁵ in the thicket of the reed-bed: and Levi 「his brother⁶ knowing this did not declare it to his brethren, for he feared lest in their anger they should cut 「their brethren⁷ down.

Pharaoh's Son dies. Pharaoh also dies and Joseph succeeds him.

XXIX. And Pharaoh's son rose from the earth and sat up and spat blood from his mouth; for the blood was running down from his temple into his mouth. And Benjamin ran up to him and took his sword and drew it from Pharaoh's son's sheath (for Benjamin was not wearing a sword upon his thigh) and wished to smite Pharaoh's son upon the breast. Then Levi ran up to him and took hold of his hand and said: "In no wise, brother, do this thing, for that we are men who worship God,

467
468
470
471
472
① Syr. ins. "who art queen"; Arm. "and queen."

② Versions om. 2469 ③ Syr. Arm. om.

④ Syr. Arm. "his brethren."

⑤ Syr. ins. "and hiding"; similarly Arm.

⑥ Syr. Arm. om.

2475 ⑦ Syr. Arm. "them."

and it is not meet for a man who worshippeth God to render evil for evil, nor to trample upon one who hath fallen, nor utterly to crush his¹ enemy even unto death. And now put back the sword into his place, and come and help me, and let us heal him of this wound; and, if he live, he will be our friend and his father Pharaoh will be our father." Then Levi raised Pharaoh's son from the earth and washed away the blood from his face and tied a bandage over his wound and set him upon his horse and led him to his father Pharaoh, relating to him all the things that had happened and befallen. And Pharaoh arose from his throne and made obeisance to Levi upon the earth and blessed him.² Then, when the third day had passed,³ Pharaoh's son died⁴ from the stone⁵ wherewith he was wounded by Benjamin.⁶ And Pharaoh mourned for his firstborn son exceedingly, whence from the grief Pharaoh fell sick and died at 109⁷ years, and he left his diadem to the all-beauteous⁸ Joseph. And Joseph reigned alone in Egypt 48 years; and after these things Joseph gave back the diadem to Pharaoh's younger child, who was at the breast when the old man Pharaoh died. And Joseph was thenceforth as father of Pharaoh's younger child in Egypt till his death, glorifying and praising God. (2482)

- 2474
2476
2479
2481
- 2475
2477
2480
- 1 B D Syr. Arm. "an." 2475 D Syr. Arm. om.
 2 B D Syr. Arm. Slav. "on the third day." 2477 Arm. ends.
 3 B D Lat. "wound of the stone"; Syr. "wound"; Slav. "wound before received."
 4 B Slav. om. 7 Lat. "99"; Syr. "177"; Slav. "169."
 5 B D Lat. Syr. Slav. om.

2778
2258

520

APPENDIX OF PASSAGES NOT CONTAINED IN THE GREEK TEXT

I. (After p. 39, l. 26).¹

215-698-1000.

LIFTING up her hands toward heaven, and Asenath feared to open her mouth toward heaven² and utter God's name. She turned again to face the wall³ and sat and beat her breast and head with her hands many times, and spake in her heart, not opening her mouth, and said: "Am I not miserable, an orphan, and desolate? My mouth is defiled by the sacrifices [of the idols and by blessing⁴ the gods of the Egyptians.⁵ And now I have vexed my body⁶ by these my tears and by ashes; still even now I cannot⁶ open my mouth [to bless thine holy and terrible name, lest perhaps God be wroth with me for calling upon his holy name. Now what shall I do, I the wretched one? I will be bold and open my mouth to him,⁷ and, if in anger he [trample upon me, he is able again to heal me;

¹ Syr. Arm. I follow Arm., which is the longer, giving the chief variants. The beginning to "said" (l. 6) is in Lat. in a short form, followed by Asenath's second speech.

² Syr. ins. "and speak to God Most High."

³ Syr. ins. "containing the window."

⁴ Syr. "and vanity of."

⁵ Syr. ins. "the children of my people."

⁶ Syr. "will."

⁷ Syr. "and call upon the holy name of the merciful God."

259-
2266

if he chastise me with tortures, he is able to comfort me twofold and, while chastising, will again renew me in his mercy. If I am sorry by reason of my sins, he will be reconciled to me and forgive all my sins. Now I will be bold and open my mouth unto him, perhaps he will have mercy upon me and forgive my sins." And Asenath turned away from the wall and raised herself upon her knees.¹

II. (After p. 41, l. 10).²

And the boy throweth his hand round his father's neck, and he gaineth strength and breatheth again after his fear and resteth upon him, but his father maketh merry at the childish trepidation of his son.³

III. (After p. 49, l. 18).⁴

And now what is thy name, lord? ⁵ tell me, that I may bless thee, lord,⁵ for ever and ever." The man ⁶ saith to her: "My name is in heaven in the book of the Most High, written from eternity ⁵ by the finger of God at the beginning of the writings before all, for that I am prince of the Most High,⁷ and all the names ⁵ whatsoever are written

¹ Syr. "'chastise me, he is the Lord and he possesseth me, and, if again he smite me, he himself will heal me.' And she looked toward heaven."

² Syr. Arm. I follow Syr.

³ Arm. om.

⁴ Lat. Arm. I follow Arm., which is the longer.

⁵ Lat. om. ⁶ Lat. "angel of the Lord."

⁷ Lat. "house of God."

in the book of the Most High are 「past finding out¹ and can neither be heard nor seen by a man 「in this world,² for that 「their names³ are great and wonderful 「and glorious² exceedingly.” And Asenath said :

IV. (After p. 52, l. 24).⁴

And the angel stretched forth his hand and his forefinger and laid it on the edge of the comb that looked east, and⁵ the track⁶ of 「his finger⁷ was turned into blood ; and he stretched forth his hand the second time and laid his finger on the edge of the comb that looked north, and⁸ the track⁶ of 「the finger⁷ became as blood. And Asenath was standing on the left side and beholding all things that the angel was doing.

¹ Lat. “ineffable.”

² Lat. om.

³ Lat. “they.”

⁴ B D versions. I follow B D. From p. 54, l. 2 (“the third time”) it seems clear that this passage is original.

⁵ Syr. ins. “drew a portion of it to himself. And again he stretched forth his right hand over the comb and touched with his finger the western side of the comb, and, as he was bringing it near to himself”; Lat. “drew back his finger to himself and drew it over the edge of the comb that looked west, and”; Arm. “brought it to the side that looked west, and.”

⁶ B Arm. Slav. “appearance.”

⁷ Syr. “the honey.”

⁸ Syr. ins. “drew it to himself, and again on the track of the honey there came blood. And again he stretched forth his hand and with his finger touched the southern part of the comb and brought it toward himself, and again”; Lat. “put in his finger over the part of the honey that looked south, and”; similarly Arm.

V. (After p. 60, l. 10).¹

And Joseph looked upon her hands² as the hands of life and her fingers as the fingers of a scribe skilled and beloved.³

VI. (After p. 60, l. 15).⁴

And they saw Asyath as the appearance of light and her beauty as the beauty of heaven.

VII. (After p. 62, l. 18).⁵

Afterward Asenath said :⁶ " I have sinned, Lord, I have sinned in thy sight, I have greatly sinned, I Asenath daughter of Putifar, priest of Heliopolis,⁷ have sinned, etc. I was most vile⁸ in my father's house and I was a virgin haughty and proud—I have sinned, etc.—and I worshipped gods whereof is no number and ate bread⁹ from their sacrifices—I have sinned, etc.—I ate bread that suffocateth and drank the cup of rebellion¹⁰ from

¹ Versions. I follow Syr.

² For the rest Lat. has "that there was no stain in them."

³ Arm. om.

⁴ Syr. Arm. I follow Syr.; Lat. "And they saw Asenath and stood still, since her beauty was wonderful and glorious."

⁵ Lat. Syr. Arm. I follow Lat.

⁶ Syr. Arm. "Asenath's song of confession to God" (Syr. add. "Most High").

⁷ Syr. "On, the city of the sun that visiteth all things"; Arm. "The city of the sun that is overseer of all the gods."

⁸ Syr. "peaceful"; Arm. om. "most . . . was."

⁹ Syr. Arm. om.

¹⁰ Arm. ins. "and ate"; Syr. (for "the cup . . . pestilence") "of their libations."

90
91
92
93
94

the table of pestilence—I have sinned, etc.—and I knew not the God of heaven nor hoped¹ in the Most High God of life—I have sinned, etc.—because I hoped in the riches of my glory and upon my beauty I was haughty and proud—I have sinned, etc.—and I was wont to despise every man ^{of the} land² and there was not a man who could stand in my sight—I have sinned, etc.—All who wooed me I³ despised and disdained—I have sinned, etc.—and I said that there is not a prince of the land who should loose my girdle of virginity—I have sinned, etc.—but I will be bride of the great king's firstborn son—I have sinned, etc.—until Joseph, the mighty one of God, came, who⁴ caught me as a fish by a hook with his ^{beauty and} his wisdom⁵ and by his manliness ^{drew me forth} and brought me to the living and Most High God and ^{gave me} a cup of wisdom and I became a bride unto him for ever and ever."

75 ① Read "speravi" for "operavi"; so Syr. Arm.

6 ② Syr. "who came before me"; Arm. om.

2 ③ Arm. ins. "hated and"; Syr. om. "I . . . sinned, etc."

2 ④ Syr. ins. "stripped me of my stubbornness and pride and bereft me of my strength and by his beauties ensnared me and"; similarly Arm.

9 ⑤ Syr. Arm. om.

00 ⑥ Syr. ins. "and by his spirit brought me into subjection to life"; Arm. "and by the spirit gave me a potion of life to drink."

01 ⑦ Syr. Arm. "strengthened me."

02 ⑧ Arm. "gave me bread of life to eat and"; Syr. "through the chief-captain of the Most High bread of life was given me and."

VIII. (After p. 65, l. 22).¹

And, when the men Simeon and Levi heard these things which Pharaoh's firstborn rebelliously spake, they were sore amazed.

¹ Syr. Arm. I follow Syr. ↙

TRANSLATIONS OF EARLY DOCUMENTS

A Series of texts important for the study of Christian origins, by various authors

UNDER THE JOINT EDITORSHIP OF

The Rev. W. O. E. OESTERLEY, D.D.

AND

The Rev. CANON G. H. BOX, M.A.

THE object of the Series is to provide short, cheap, and handy text-books for students, either working by themselves or in classes. The aim is to furnish in translations important texts unencumbered by commentary or elaborate notes, which can be had in larger works.

FIRST SERIES

Palestinian-Jewish and Cognate Texts (Pre-Rabbinic)

1. Aramaic Papyri. A. E. Cowley, Litt.D., Sub-Librarian of the Bodleian Library, Oxford.
2. The Wisdom of Ben-Sira (Ecclesiasticus). The Rev. W. O. E. Oesterley, D.D., Vicar of St. Alban's, Bedford Park, W.; Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of London.
3. The Book of Enoch. The Rev. R. H. Charles, D.D., Canon of Westminster.
4. The Book of Jubilees. The Rev. Canon Charles.
5. The Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs. The Rev. Canon Charles.
6. The Odes and Psalms of Solomon. The Rev. G. H. Box, M.A., Rector of Sutton, Beds., Hon. Canon of St. Albans.
7. The Ascension of Isaiah. The Rev. Canon Charles.
8. The Apocalypse of Ezra (ii. Esdras). The Rev. Canon Box.
9. The Apocalypse of Baruch. The Rev. Canon Charles.
10. The Apocalypse of Abraham. The Rev. Canon Box.
11. The Testaments of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. The Rev. Canon Box and S. Gazelee.
12. The Assumption of Moses. The Rev. W. J. Ferrar, M.A., Vicar of Holy Trinity, East Finchley.

FIRST SERIES—continued

13. The Biblical Antiquities of Philo. M. R. James, Litt.D., F.B.A., Hon. Litt.D., Dublin, Hon. LL.D. St. Andrews, Provost of King's College, Cambridge.
14. Lost Apocrypha of the Old Testament. M. R. James, Litt.D.

Now Ready—Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5 and 8, 7 and 10 (in one vol.),
9 and 12 (in one vol.), and No. 13.

SECOND SERIES

Hellenistic-Jewish Texts

1. The Wisdom of Solomon. The Rev. Dr. Oesterley.
2. The Sibylline Oracles (Books iii-v). The Rev. H. N. Bate, M.A., Vicar of Christ Church, Lancaster Gate, W.; Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of London.
3. The Letter of Aristeas. H. St. John Thackeray, M.A., King's College, Cambridge.
4. Selections from Philo. J. H. A. Hart, M.A.
5. Selections from Josephus. H. St. J. Thackeray, M.A.
6. The Third and Fourth Books of Maccabees. The Rev. C. W. Emmet, B.D., Vicar of West Hendred, Berks.
7. The Book of Joseph and Asenath. Translated from the Greek text (for the first time in English) by E. W. Brooks.

Now Ready—Nos. 1, 2, 3, 6 and 7.

THIRD SERIES

Palestinian-Jewish and Cognate Texts (Rabbinic)

- *1. Pirqe Aboth. The Rev. Dr. Oesterley.
 - 2. Berakthoth. The Rev. A. Lukyn Williams, D.D.
 - *3. Yoma. The Rev. Canon Box.
 - *4. Shabbath. The Rev. Dr. Oesterley.
 - *5. Sanhedrin. Rev. H. Danby.
 - *6. Qimchi's Commentary on the Psalms (Book I, Selections). The Rev. R. G. Finch, B.D.
-

7. Tamid	10. Sopherim	13. Taanith
8. Aboda Zara	11. Megilla	14. Megillath
9. Middoth	12. Sukka	Taanith

* It is proposed to publish these texts first by way of experiment. If the Series should so far prove successful the others will follow.

Jewish Literature and Christian Origins :

Vol. I. The Apocalyptic Literature.

„ II. A Short Survey of the Literature of Rabbinical Judaism.

By the Revs. Dr. Oesterley and Canon Box.

Jewish Uncanonical Writings : A popular Introduction. By the Rev. W. J. Ferrar. [Now Ready.]

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE

LONDON: 6 ST. MARTIN'S PLACE, W.C.2

NEW YORK: THE MACMILLAN COMPANY

